PREFACE

THE collection of songs edited in the present volume possesses a twofold interest. Composed so long ago as the fourteenth century A. D., it claims the attention not only of the philologist as the oldest known specimen of the Kāshmīrī language, but also, and still more, that of the student of religions.

In ancient times, the religious system based on Śaiva Yōga was the object of much study amongst the learned men of Kashmīr. From that remote corner of North-Western India their teaching influenced the whole peninsula,—so much so that we even read that Rāmānuja, the leader of a rival Vaiṣṇava belief, felt compelled to travel from distant Madras to Kashmīr, with the special object of combating the hostile creed at its fountain head. There is an imposing mass of Kashmīr Śaiva literature still extant. Much of it has been published in the original Sanskrit, and more than one English work has been devoted to it.

Lallā, or Lal Dēd, the authoress of the following verses, was a wandering ascetic, and a devoted follower of this cult. The importance of her songs consists in the fact that they are not a systematic exposé of Śaivism on the lines laid down by the theologians who preceded her, but illustrate the religion on its popular side. What we have here is not a mere book-religion as evolved in the minds of great thinkers and idealists, but a picture of the actual hopes and fears of the common folk that nominally followed the teaching of these wise men whom they had accepted as their guides. The book, in short, gives an account, often in vivid and picturesque language, of the actual working out in practice of a religion previously worked out in theory. As such, it is a unique contribution to the body of evidence that must necessarily form the basis of a future history of one of the most important religious systems of India.

A word may be added as to the respective shares of those responsible for the preparation of this edition. While each has considered and has discussed what the other has written, it may be roughly assumed that, while the account of the Yōga system and the many notes referring to it are directly, or indirectly, from the pen of Dr. Barnett, the preparation of the text, its translation, the various appendixes, and the vocabulary are the work of Sir George Grierson.

SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION USED

THE system of transliteration is the same as that employed by Sir George Grierson in his Kāshmirī Dictionary.

The Mātrā-vowels are represented as follows:

क्क $k^a ka$, क्कि $k^ā k^i$, क्कु $k^o k^u$, क्कू $k^ū k^ū$; कि k^i , कु k^u , कू $k^ū$.
क् $k^ē$, क् $k^ō$.

The ordinary vowels are represented as follows:

क ka , का $kā$, कि ki , की $kī$, कु ku , कू $kū$, क्य $kě$, के $kē$, कै kai , क्क $kō$, को $kō$, कौ kau , क्कि $kā k^i$, क्कु $kō k^u$, क्कू $kū k^ū$, काक् $kō k^ū$, कोक् $kō k^u$, कौक् $kō k^u$, कूक् $kō k^ū$.

ऋ is no longer a vowel, and is represented by ru . ॠ is similarly represented by $rē$. Anunāsika is represented by $~$. Thus ऋ $lā$

The Kāshmirī consonants are :

क ka , ख kha , ग ga , (घ) gha , (ङ) $ṅa$.

च $cē$, छ $chē$, ज $jē$, (झ) $jhē$, ञ $ñē$.

ट $ṭa$, ठ $ṭha$, ड $ḍa$, (ढ) $ḍha$, (ण) $ṇa$.

त ta , थ tha , द da , (ध) dha , न na .

प pa , फ pha , ब ba , (भ) bha , म ma .

य $yē$, र ra , ल la , व va .

श $shē$, (ष) $shē$, स sa , ह ha .

Letters enclosed in brackets are found only in borrowed words, and do not belong to the language.

For further particulars Sir George Grierson's Kāshmirī Dictionary, in course of publication by the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and his Manual of the Kāshmirī Language, published by the Clarendon Press, may be consulted.

For Sanskrit, the ordinary system of the Royal Asiatic Society is followed.

INTRODUCTION

THE verses in the following collection are attributed to a woman of Kashmīr, named, in Sanskrit, Lallā Yōgīśwarī. There are few countries in which so many wise saws and proverbial sayings are current as in Kashmīr,¹ and none of these have greater repute than those attributed by universal consent to Lal Dēd, or 'Granny Lal', as she is called nowadays. There is not a Kāshmirī, Hindū or Musalmān, who has not some of these ready on the tip of his tongue, and who does not reverence her memory.

Little is known about her. All traditions agree that she was a contemporary of Sayyid 'Alī Hamadānī, the famous saint who exercised a great influence in converting Kashmīr to Islām. He arrived in Kashmīr in A.D. 1380, and remained there six years, the reigning sovereign being Quṭbu'd-Dīn (A.D. 1377-93).² As we shall see from her songs, Lallā was a Yōginī, i.e. a follower of the Kashmīr branch of the Śaiva religion, but she was no bigot, and, to her, all religions were at one in their essential elements.³ There is hence no inherent difficulty in accepting the tradition of her association with Sayyid 'Alī. Hindūs, in their admiration for their coreligionist, go, it is true, too far when they assert that he received his inspiration from her, but the Musalmāns of the Valley, who naturally deny this, and who consider him to be the great local apostle of their faith, nevertheless look upon her with the utmost respect.⁴

Numerous stories are current about Lallā in the Valley, but none of them is deserving of literal credence. She is said to have been originally a married woman of respectable family. She was cruelly treated by her mother-in-law, who nearly starved her.¹ The wicked woman tried to persuade Lallā's husband that she was unfaithful to him, but when he followed her to what he believed was an assignation, he found her at prayer. The mother-in-law tried other devices, which were all conquered by Lallā's virtue and patience, but at length she succeeded in getting her turned out of the house.² Lallā wandered forth in rags and adopted a famous Kāshmirī Śaiva saint named Sēd Bōy^u as her Guru or spiritual preceptor. The result of his teaching was that she herself took the status of a mendicant devotee, and wandered about the country singing and dancing in a half-nude condition. When remonstrated with for such disregard for decency, she is said to have replied that they only were men who feared God, and that there were very few of such about.³ During this time Sayyid 'Alī Hamadānī arrived in Kashmīr, and one day she saw him in the distance. Crying out 'I have seen a man', she turned and fled. Seeing a baker's shop close by, she leaped into the blazing oven and disappeared, being apparently consumed to ashes. The saint followed her and inquired if any woman had come that way, but the baker's wife, out of fear, denied that she had seen any one. Sayyid 'Alī continued

Lali nālūtū^ū šali na zāh.*

'Whether they killed a big sheep or a small one, it was all the same; Lal had always a stone for her dinner.' For, when she dined in the presence of other people, the mother-in-law used to put a lumpy stone on her platter and thinly cover it with rice, so that it looked like quite a big heap. Still she never murmured. Cf. K. Pr., p. 82, and Panjab Notes and Queries, ii. 743.

his search, and suddenly Lallā reappeared from the oven clad in the green garments of Paradise.

The above stories will give some idea of the legends that cluster round the name of Lallā. All that we can affirm with some assurance is that she certainly existed, and that she probably lived in the fourteenth century of our era, being a contemporary of Sayyid 'Alī Hamadānī at the time of his visit to Kashmīr. We know from her own verses¹ that she was in the habit of wandering about in a semi-nude state, dancing and singing in ecstatic frenzy as did the Hebrew nābī's of old and the more modern Dervishes.

No authentic manuscript of her compositions has come down to us. Collections made by private individuals have occasionally been put together,² but none is complete, and no two agree in contents or text. While there is thus a complete dearth of ordinary manuscripts, there are, on the other hand, sources from which an approximately correct text can be secured.

The ancient Indian system by which literature is recorded not on paper but on the memory, and carried down from generation to generation of teachers and pupils, is still in complete survival in Kashmīr. Such fleshy tables of the heart are often more trustworthy than birch-bark or paper manuscripts. The reciters, even when learned Paṇḍits, take every care to deliver the messages word for word as they have received them, whether they understand them or not. In such cases we not infrequently come across words of which the meaning given is purely traditional or is even lost. A typical instance of this has occurred in the experience of Sir George Grierson. In the summer of 1896 Sir Aurel Stein took down in writing from the mouth of a professional story-teller a collection of folk-tales, which he subsequently made over to Sir George for editing and translation. In the course of dictation, the narrator, according to custom, conscientiously reproduced words of which he did not know the sense. They were 'old words', the signification of which had been lost, and which had been passed down to him through generations of ustāds, or teachers. That they were not inventions of the moment, or corruptions of the speaker, is shown by the facts that not only were they recorded simultaneously by a well-known Kāshmirī Paṇḍit, who was equally ignorant of their meanings, and who accepted them without hesitation on the authority of the reciter, but that, long afterwards, at Sir George's request, Sir Aurel Stein got the man to repeat the passages in which the words occurred. They were repeated by him verbatim, literatim, et punctatim, as they had been recited by him to Sir Aurel fifteen years before.

The present collection of verses was recorded under very similar conditions. In the year 1914 Sir George Grierson asked his friend and former assistant, Mahāmahôpādhyāya Paṇḍit Mukunda Rāma Śāstrī, to obtain for him a good copy of the Lallā-vākyaṇi, as these verses of Lallā's are commonly called by Paṇḍits. After much search he was unable to find a satisfactory manuscript. But finally he came into touch with a very old Brāhmaṇ named Dharma-dāsa Darwēsh of the village of Gush.¹ Just as the professional story-teller mentioned above recited folk-tales, so he made it his business, for the benefit of the piously disposed, to recite Lallā's songs as he had received them by family tradition (kula-paramparācūrakrama). The Mahāmahôpādhyāya recorded the text from his dictation, and added a commentary, partly in Hindī and partly in Sanskrit, all of which he forwarded to Sir George Grierson. These materials formed the basis of the present edition. It cannot claim to be founded on a collation of various manuscripts, but we can at least say that it is an accurate reproduction of one recension of the songs, as they are current at the present day. As in the case of Sir Aurel Stein's folk-tales, this text contains words and passages which the reciter did not profess to understand. He had every inducement to make the verses intelligible, and any conjectural emendation would at once have been accepted on his authority ; but, following the traditions of his calling, he had the honesty to refrain from this, and said simply that this was what he had received, and that he did not know its meaning. Such a record is in some respects more valuable than any written manuscript.

Besides this collection, we have also consulted two manuscripts belonging to the Stein Collection housed in the Oxford Indian Institute.¹ Both were written in the Śāradā character. Of these, one (No. cccxvi of the catalogue, and referred to as 'Stein A' in the following pages) is but a fragment, the first two leaves and all those after the seventeenth being missing. It is nevertheless of considerable value ; for, besides giving the text of the original, it also gives a translation into Sanskrit verse, by a Paṇḍit named Rājānaka Bhāskara, of songs Nos. 7-49. The Kāshmīrī text, if we allow for the customary eccentricities of spelling, presents no variant readings of importance and is in places corrupt. We have, therefore, not taken account of it ; but, so far as it is available, we reproduce the Sanskrit translation under each verse of our edition.²

The other manuscript (No. cccxlv—referred to herein as 'Stein B') demands more particular consideration. It contains the Kāshmīrī text of forty-nine of the songs in the present collection. The spelling is in the usual inconsequent style of all Kāshmīrī manuscripts written before Īśvara-kaula gave a fixed orthography to the language in the concluding decades of the nineteenth century,³ and there are also, as usual, a good many mistakes of the copyist. It is, however, valuable as giving a number of variant readings, and because the scribe has marked the metrical accentuation of most of the verses, by putting the mark || after each accented word.⁴ For this reason, and also because it gives a good example of the

² Since the above was written, a complete edition of Rājānaka Bhāskara's translation has been printed in Kashmīr. It covers altogether sixty of Lallā's verses. From this edition, the verses missing in Stein A have been supplied.

³ Īśvara-kaula's spelling is that followed in our printed text.

⁴ Regarding the accentual nature of Lallā's metre, see Appendix III.

spelling of Kāshmīrī before Īśvara-kaula's time, under each verse of our text we reproduce, in the Nāgarī character the corresponding verse, if available, of this manuscript. Except that we have divided the words—a matter which rarely gives rise to any doubt—we print these exactly as they stand in the manuscript with all their mistakes and inconsistencies of spelling.

The order of verses in this manuscript is different from that of Dharma-dāsa's text, and we have therefore, in Appendix IV, given a Concordance, showing the correspondence between the two.

Although there is not much consistency in old Kāshmīrī spelling, the following general remarks may facilitate the reading of the text of Stein B. No attempt is made in it to indicate the existence of mātrā-vowels or the consequent epenthetic changes of vowels caused by them.¹ For instance, the word totu (तुतु) is spelt ततो, and the termination -wōn (वोनु) is spelt वानो. As a rule, long vowels are written in the place of these mātrā-vowels, the spelling of the old Prakrit from which Kāshmīrī is derived being thus perpetuated. Thus, we have just seen that u-mātrā is represented by ō. Similarly, i-mātrā is represented by ī. For instance, tām (तमि) is spelt तमी, and tōpⁱtan (तापितन्) is spelt तापीतन्. Again, ū-mātrā is represented by ū, as in trōvū (त्रावू), written चावू.

Kāshmīrī possesses a series of affricatives च ṣa, छ ṣha, and ज za. In Īśvara-kaula's system these are indicated, as shown here, by dots put under the corresponding palatal letters. In Stein B, on the contrary, they are indicated by the palatals without any distinguishing mark—thus च, छ, ज. The true palatals are then distinguished by adding to each the letter ya. Thus—च ca, छ cha, and ज ja.

It is a universal rule in Kāshmīrī that every^r final surd consonant is aspirated. Thus, rāt, night, is pronounced rāth, and in Īśvara-kaula's spelling is written राथ्. Before his time it was not customary to indicate this aspiration in writing, and accordingly Stein B spells this word as रात्, and so on in other cases.

Lallā's songs were composed in an old form of the Kāshmīrī language,¹ but it is not probable that we have them in the exact form in which she uttered them. The fact that they have been transmitted by word of mouth prohibits such a supposition. As the language changed insensibly from generation to generation, so must the outward form of the verses have changed in recitation. But, nevertheless, respect for the authoress and the metrical form of the songs have preserved a great many archaic forms of expression.²

As already said, Lallā was a devout follower of the Kashmīr school of Yōga Śaivism. Very little is yet known in Europe concerning the tenets of this form of Hinduism, and we have therefore done our best to explain the many allusions by notes appended to each verse. In addition to these, the following general account of the tenets of this religion has been prepared by Dr. Barnett, which will, we hope, throw light on what is a somewhat obscure subject.

² This matter of Lallā's language is considered at length in Appendix II.

PRELIMINARY NOTE ON YŌGA

I.

1. The object of the discipline called Yōga is to emancipate the individual soul (puruṣa) from its bondage to the material universe (prakṛti). In the term prakṛti is included the mental organism, commonly styled in the Yōga-sūtra citta. The emancipation is effected by a mental and bodily discipline culminating in a spiritual transformation, in which there comes into existence a permanent intuition revealing the essential distinction (vivēka) between puruṣa and prakṛti. This is the state of kaivalya, isolation, which is salvation.

2. The citta has five intellectual functions, vṛttis. They are: (1) pramāṇa, right judgement of real things; (2) viparīyaya, false judgement of real things; (3) vikalpa, imagination without corresponding reality, based on mere words; (4) nidrā, 'sleep', i.e. the negative action that occurs in sleep, based on no conception of reality; (5) smṛti, memory, continuance of connexion with an object that has been perceived. Citta has also five moral functions, the klēśas, or 'afflictions', viz. (1) avidyā, primal ignorance, by which puruṣa imagines itself to be identical with the material citta; (2) asmitā, the conception of an 'I am', egoism identifying the powers of puruṣa and matter; (3) rāga, material desire; (4) drēṣa, hate; (5) abhinivēśa, clinging to embodied life. The klēśas move the subject of thought constantly to works, karma, from which arise saṁskāras and vāsanās, mental predispositions moving him to corresponding future works; and so the vicious cycle goes on in birth after birth for ever, until salvation can be found. To gain salvation the Yōgī attempts to paralyse the five vṛttis of citta and wear down the klēśas by the various ascetic exercises included under the term aṣṭāṅga, 'eight members'. These are: (1) yama, moral discipline in relation to others; (2) niyama, moral discipline in relation to oneself; (3) āsana, suitable modes of sitting during meditation; (4) prāṇāyāma, regulation of breathing; (5) pratyāhāra, retracting the sense-organs from objects of sense; (6) dhāraṇā, negative fixation of citta by pinning it to an object; (7) dhyāna, meditation, positive fixation of citta; (8) samādhi, perfect stillness of thought, in which all sense of individuality is extinguished. In the course of these the Yōgī is supposed to win various miraculous powers (vibhūti), in addition to the 'light of intuition', prajñāloka. The last three āṅgas collectively make the stage of training called saṁnyāsa, and culminate in the condition styled sabīja samādhi, 'the stillness of spirit with the seed', namely, the seed of future activity of citta and consequent karma; or what is nearly the same thing, samprajñāta samādhi, stillness of spirit in which, however, the vṛttis of citta are not yet paralysed. To attain the final stage, this kind of samādhi has to be converted into nirbīja, 'seedless', or asamprajñāta 'unconscious', samādhi. This takes place in three phases, called nirōdha-pariṇāma, samādhi-pariṇāma, and ekāgratā-pariṇāma. In the first of these the activity of the waking state of citta is arrested, and its vṛttis are temporarily paralysed; in the second, the power of citta to relate itself to manifold objects is destroyed, and its cognitions are restricted to a single object of inward or outward perception; in the third, the two previous conditions are combined in equal proportion. These are permanent transformations, as a result of which all sense of objectivity disappears from the matter of thought, leaving only the intuition of the distinction between puruṣa and prakṛti, wherein the puruṣa shines for ever in its perfectly pure still radiance.

II.

3. From the first the method of gnosis which we have outlined presupposed certain mystic conceptions of the natural and spiritual world. These in course of time have become more and more important in the Yōgic systems, and have tended to obscure the philosophical and ethical elements in the primitive Yōga. They may be classified broadly under two heads: (1) the theory of Nature and of salvation by means thereof; (2) the practice of physical means supposed to be efficacious in attaining the latter object. We shall now endeavour to give a general outline of the Yōgic theory of nature in its developed form, noting in advance that it represents only one of the various aspects which have been assumed by Yōga, though perhaps the most important aspect. Our exposition is based upon the following works: Śiva-saṁhitā, an anonymous work of some antiquity (quoted as SS.); Ṣaṭ-cakra-nirūpana, by Pūrṇānanda (quoted as SCN.); and Haṭha-yōga-pradīpikā, by Svātmārāma (quoted as HYP., in the German translation by H. Walter, Munich, 1893). The references to SS. are according to the text as published in Sacred Books of the Hindus, Allahabad, 1914.

4. In Yōgic theory the human body is conceived as a miniature copy or replica of the world without it; the forces by which this microcosm is controlled at the same time operate upon the macrocosm outside, and thus by certain physical and mental processes the Yōgī can win for himself not only supernatural powers over his own body and mind but also a miraculous control over the universe, culminating in the complete translation of his soul into the highest phase of Being, the Absolute (usually conceived as Supreme Śiva) for ever and ever.

5. In the human body the vertebral column is conceived as Mount Mēru, the central mountain of Hindū cosmology. As the macrocosmic sun and moon are imagined to turn round Mēru, so we have a microcosmic sun and moon in the human body: the moon at the top of the vertebral column and the sun at its base (SS. II. 6-12). Among the numerous nāḍīs (veins or arteries: see HYP. p. iv) there are three of supreme importance, Suṣumnā, Idā, and Pīṅgalā, which descend from the brain into the pit of the abdomen; and HYP. (p. iii, and text III. 113) says that between the pudendum and navel is a 'bulb' (kandā), into which the nāḍīs debouch. Suṣumnā is identified with Agni, fire. At the upper end of Idā is the moon, and they are identified; at the lower end of Pīṅgalā is the sun, and they too are identified (SS. II. 13–20). These three nāḍīs are in immediate conjunction, Idā being on the left hand of Suṣumnā, and Piṅgalā on the right. Suṣumnā rises vertically from the pelvic region along the vertebral column as far as the Brahma-randhra (on which see below); there it bends round to the right of the Ājñā circle (see below, § 18) and passes up into the left nostril. In the centre of Suṣumnā is a nāḍī called Citrā, which is said to be of five colours, and to be the upādhi of the body, and to have the Brahma-randhra at its upper end (SS. II. 18–19, V. 124). The Brahma-randhra is the upper extremity of Suṣumnā, and of the inner nāḍī enclosed in Suṣumnā.

6. SCN. refines somewhat upon this theory by asserting that inside Suṣumnā there is a bright nāḍī called Vajrā, and that inside Vajrā is another nāḍī called Citriṇī, which passes through all the six circles attached to the spine, to which we shall come presently (§§ 9 ff.). In the centre of Citriṇī is the Brahma-nāḍī, a subtile duct representing pure knowledge and bliss. At the lower mouth of Suṣumnā is the Brahma-dvāra, or ‘Door of Brahma’, where are the ‘knots’ (granthi: see HYP. p. xvii¹). Cf. also HYP. pp. v, vii.

7. Sometimes, to continue the analogy of microcosm to macrocosm, Idā is identified with the Ganges, Piṅgalā with the Jamnā, and Suṣumnā with the Saraswatī, and the point where they meet, at the mouth of the Brahma-randhra, is called Trivēṇī (Tribeni, the meeting place of the Huglī or Ganges, Jamnā, and Saraswatī, in Hooghly District); by daily spiritual contemplation of this union, corresponding to the physical act of bathing at the real Tribeni, the Yōgi may win salvation for his ancestors and himself (SS. V. 103 ff., 130 ff.). Sometimes the sacred city of Benares (Vārāṇasī) is localized in the microcosm by styling Idā Vārāṇā and Piṅgalā Asī, so that their place of union at the Brahma-randhra is Vārāṇasī, the residence of Viśvanātha, the Lord of the Universe (SS. V. 100–1).

8. The microcosmic moon at the top of the vertebral column, which is said to consist of eight and sometimes of sixteen digits, is always exuding nectar, which flows downwards. Half of this nectar passes through Idā, on the left side, and there becomes water for the nourishment of the body. The other half goes through Suṣumnā into the vertebral column, and thence down to the base of the latter, where it meets the microcosmic sun. This sun, which has twelve digits, casts its rays upwards through Piṅgalā along the right side of the body, and thence through the system (SS. II, 6-12, V. 145).

9. In the abdomen, in the middle of the sphere of the sun, is the Vaiśvānara fire, which effects the process of digestion in the body (SS. II. 32-34). In the same region is situated the first of the cakras or circles, which are conceived as being of the form of lotuses, attached at intervals to Suṣumnā (cf. HYP. p. xiv). The first circle is the Mūlādhāra, or simply Ādhāra, and is imagined to be a lotus of four digits in width, situated two digits above the anus and two digits below the penis. In the pericarp of this lotus is a triangular space representing the yōni or female organ. On this space dwells the Kula-Kuṇḍalinī (or simply Kuṇḍalinī), who is the Śakti or Cic-chakti, the power of spirit, the creative force of the phenomenal universe (cf. HYP. p. xiii). She is golden of hue, like a streak of lightning; when at rest, she sleeps rolled up in three and a half coils, like a serpent, with her tail in her mouth, inside the lower orifice of Suṣumnā. On her left is Idā, which coils round Suṣumnā and finally enters the right nostril; on her right is Piṅgalā, proceeding in the reverse way upwards and debouching into the left nostril (SS. II. 21-31, V. 56 ff., 124). SCN. 5 ff. adds to these details the information that Mūlādhāra represents earth, and is the seat of Brahma, and it locates the yōni (which is called Traipura; cf. below, § 21) at the mouth of Vajrā (§ 6).

10. Kuṇḍalinī is sometimes termed Vāg-dēvī or Goddess of Speech, the Śakti of Viṣṇu, the mother of the three Guṇas, the Seed of Being (bīja). Over her sleeping form broods the Kāma-bīja or 'seed of Love', a bright spiritual radiance endowed with the powers of knowledge and action, which circulates through the body. This Kāma-bīja is also styled Svayambhū-liṅga, the phallic symbol of the Self-created Being Śiva (SS. V. 57-62).

11. SCN. 9-12 has a very similar account: it adds that around the yōni there blows a red wind called Kandarpa (the same as Kāma, Love); in the yōni is the Svayambhū-liṅga, having the hue of molten gold, and facing downwards; above this is Kuṇḍalinī, who is like a lotus-fibre and lightning, and covers with her face the orifice of Suṣumnā. It also states that in the midst of Kuṇḍalinī is Paramā Kalā or Paramēśvarī, or Mahāprakṛti, the super-subtile principle of Bliss which is like lightning, and illuminates the universe (SCN. 13).

12. The yōni and the liṅga upon it are known as the Kula or Home, the site of the Power of Phenomenal Being: we shall return to this anon (§ 19).

13. A little distance above Mūlādhāra, at the base of the penis, is the second circle, Svādhiṣṭhāna, conceived as a red lotus with six petals (SS. V. 75 ff.). It represents Varuṇa, and is the seat of Viṣṇu (SCN. 15 ff.).

14. The third circle is Maṇipūra, a golden lotus of ten petals by the navel (SS. V. 79 ff.). SCN. holds that it is blue, and that it represents Agni, and that Rudra dwells on the inverted triangle (yōni) at its centre (SCN. 20 ff.).

15. The fourth circle is Anāhata, a red lotus of twelve petals situate in the heart; in it is a flame styled Bāṇa-liṅga (SS. V. 83 ff.). It represents Vāyu or Wind; in the double triangle within it dwells Īśāna; in the middle of this double triangle is a yōni or triangle known as Trikōṇā Śakti, within which is the golden Bāṇa-liṅga, on the head of which is a lotus of eight petals, the seat of Lakṣmī (SCN. 23 ff.).

16. In this lotus dwells the Prāṇa or breath of life,¹ together with the vāsanās or influences of former works upon the soul, the karma thereof, and its ahamkāra or principle of egoity (SS. III. 1-8).

17. Above Anāhata, and situate in the throat, is the circle Viśuddha, a golden lotus of sixteen petals (SS. V. 90 ff.). SCN. adds that it represents Ākāśa or ether, and is the residence of Sadāśiva, and ascribes to it the colour of smoke (SCN. 29 ff.).

18. The sixth circle is Ājñā, a lotus of two petals between the eyebrows, which contains the mystic force called akṣara-bīja (SS. V. 96 ff., 145 ff.). It is of the colour of the moon. In its pericarp is the seat of Śiva called Itara, in the form of a linga, like a series of lightnings; it is parama-kula-paula, the highest stage of the Kula, in which Śiva and his consort Śakti are half and half, ardhāṅgī, in mutual fusion. In it is envisaged Paramātman, the Supreme Self, as creator of origin, maintenance, and dissolution of the cosmos, like a halo of the light of fire, sun, and moon. After death the Yōgī who has fixed his breaths on this seat of Viṣṇu enters here into Param Brahma (SCN. 34-40).

19. Above all these circles is the highest of all, Sahasrāra, conceived as a lotus with a thousand petals, situated at the base of the palate. On its pericarp is a reversed triangular space or yōni, in the centre of which is the Brahma-randhra or upper extremity of Suṣumnā. On this yōni (or below it, according to SS. V. 145) is the Moon, whose nectar flows downwards through the system (SS. V. 103 ff., 122 ff.); its place is within the sinus of the forehead (SS. V. 148). Sahasrāra is conceived as Mount Kailāsa, the home of Śiva; and as representing the sphere of the Absolute or Transcendental Being, Parama-Śiva or Paramēśvara, as opposed to the sphere of cosmic action or Kula, it is styled A-kula or Na-kula. It is thus the physical as well as the spiritual antithesis of the Kula at the lower end of Suṣumnā (SS. V. 151 ff.).

20. As usual, SCN. refines on this. It describes Sahasrāra as having a thousand red petals facing downwards, and containing fifty letters of the alphabet from a to kṣa. It contains the full moon without the hare (our 'man in the moon'), and in its central yōni the Yōgī should contemplate the Void (SCN. 42 ff.). In the void of this yōni is the sixteenth digit of the Moon; it is called Amā or Anā; it is like lightning, and is thin as one-hundredth part of a lotus-fibre ; it conveys the nectar flowing from Sahasrāra. Inside Amā is the digit Nirvāṇa, which is fine as a thousandth part of a hair, curved like the new moon, bright as twelve suns, the tutelary deity (adhidaivata) of living creatures. In the middle of Nirvāṇa is Apūrva-nirvāṇa-śakti, which is thin as the ten-millionth part of a hair and bright as ten million suns, the creator of the threefold world and dispenser of the knowledge of Brahma, the life of all creatures. Inside this Apūrva-nirvāṇa is the Śiva-pada or seat of Siva, or Param Brahma, also called Haṁsa-sthāna, the Swan's Home, the revelation of salvation and state of eternal bliss (SCN. 48-51).

21. As the object of metaphysical contemplation is to merge the individual soul into the absolute All-Spirit, so the object of Yōgic contemplation is to absorb the Kuṇḍalinī in the microcosm, representing the macrocosmic Energy, into Sahasrāra, typifying the Absolute, whereby the Cosmos is merged into the infinite bliss of Paramêśvara. In order to effect this transit of Kuṇḍalinī through Suṣumnā and the Brahma-randhra into Sahasrāra, the nāḍīs must, by the exercise of prāṇāyāma, be blocked up with air introduced into them by inspiration (pūraka) and retained in them (kumbhaka);¹ the normal circulation of the air through the system, which causes the continuance of the soul's imprisonment in the body, is arrested by this stoppage of the air. Then Kuṇḍalinī, when she has been aroused to sufficient energy by mystic exercises, passes up through Suṣumnā, bursting the eight knots (§ 6) that bind the nāḍīs, and enters through the Brahma-randhra into Sahasrāra, the realm of the Absolute (SS. V. 127 ff.). But long training is needed before Kuṇḍalinī can be stimulated to this supreme effort. An earlier stage of the training is passed in Mūlādhāra. The Yōgī after taking a deep inspiration fixes his thought upon the lotus of Mūlādhāra and compresses the yōni in it, meditating upon Kāma, the Spirit of Love, who dwells in the yōni, and conceiving in the flame above it a union as Śiva and Śakti. Then Kuṇḍalinī, styled Tripurā as comprising the three principles fire, sun, and moon, begins to rise in Suṣumnā, and after drinking the nectar streaming down it returns to the Kula (SS. IV. 1-5, V. 61 ff.). Mudrās, or various postures of the body, are practised in order to increase mechanically the activity of Kuṇḍalinī. These methods, with further contemplation of the higher circles up to Ājñā, stimulate Kuṇḍalinī to such a degree that in the last stage the Yōgī is able to bring her up into Sahasrāra. By long practice his citta-vṛttis (activities of the material organ of thought) become absorbed in the Akula, the Absolute; his samādhi becomes one of perfect stillness. Drinking the lunar nectar of Sahasrāra, he overcomes Death (cosmic, conditioned being) and the Kula (SS. V. 151 ff.).

22. SCN. 52 instructs the Yōgī, after due practice of the yamas and niyamas (above, § 2) and spiritual purification, to stimulate Kuṇḍalinī to burst the Svayambhū-liṅga, and to bring her with the sound of the mystic syllable hum to the Brahma-dvāra (§ 6), in the centre of Mūlādhāra. She then bursts the liṅgas in Anāhata and Ājñā, and at the Brahma-randhra unites with Parama-Siva, shining like a bright thread of lightning. The Yōgī should bring her together with his soul (jīvātman) into Sahasrāra, and there contemplate her as supreme and as Caitanya, spirit. When she has there drunk the red nectar from Śiva, she returns to Mūlādhāra by the way whereby she came. Then he should make a libation of this nectar to the deities of the cosmos, whereby he obtains immunity from future birth and assurance of absorption into the Infinite.

23. Yōgic writers often dwell upon the phenomena of the Nāda. Of the cosmological significance of this term we shall speak below (§ 24); here we need only notice its physical aspect, in which it signifies the mystic sound, or anāhata-dhvani, heard by the Yōgī in the Suṣumnā in the interior of his body. Several varieties of this Nāda are mentioned in HYP. IV. 69 ff. The first of them is the sound caused in the ether of the heart when the exercise of prāṇāyāma (§ 2) has loosened the brahma-granṭhi or knot of Brahma in the Anāhata circle. Sometimes the sound is identified with the mystic syllable Ōm.

Probably the idea was suggested by the noise heard on closing the ears with the hands, to which HYP. IV. 82 refers.

24. Yōgic works, in common with the Tantras, often refer to a theory of cosmogony of which the leading idea is as follows. The Puruṣa, Absolute Spirit, Para Siva, or Brahma, and the Prakṛti, identified with the Supreme Śakti, are eternally coexistent. Like Puruṣa, Prakṛti is to be conceived as both unqualified and qualified; through Her universal presence as the principle of cosmic Bliss, Puruṣa reveals Himself in all finite being. Essentially they are two in one and one in two. Creation begins when from Him as affected by Her, i.e. as niṣkala, there issues the primal Bindu or 'drop' (the dot representing the final nasal sound at the end of the mystic syllable Ōm). The same idea is sometimes expressed more fully by the statement that Prakṛti by contact with Puruṣa becomes spiritualized (cin-mātrā), and in an effort towards creation She becomes solidified and changes into the primal Bindu. In the latter Śiva and Śakti exist together in an as yet undissolved union, shrouded in the bonds of Māyā, bearing the potentialities of cosmic creation, continuance, and dissolution. It is imagined as existing in the form of a grain of gram or pulse in the Sahasrāra of the microcosm (see above, § 19), where it composes the Void (§ 20) or Brahma-pada there. This primal Bindu—under the influence of Time, according to some—divides itself into three, a gross or seminal Bindu, the germ of the material universe, a subtle Bindu which contains the guṇas or modes of matter (the well-known Sattwa, Rajas, and Tamas), which is termed Nāda, and a supreme Bindu. Nāda literally means 'sound', and denotes or is denoted by the semicircle under the bindu or dot on the syllable Ōm (ॐ). From the Bindu as it thus divides itself arises an inarticulate sound styled Śabda-Brahman, 'Speech-Brahman', from which emerge, according to some, the three cosmic Powers of Knowledge, Will, and Action: others derive from it the genesis of the material principle of the finite universe, Mahat or Buddhi, and its evolutes. The theories of cosmic evolution that are connected with all this are extremely complicated and obscure, and hardly repay study. But it may be well to call attention to the similar theory of the Śaiva Siddhānta, one school of which teaches that from Pure Māyā emanates Nāda (Vāk), the elemental sound or Logos, and from Nāda the Bindu or cosmic germ, from which are successively evolved the principles of the finite universe; in this theory Śiva includes the Trinity consisting of Paṭi, Paśu, and Pāśa, or 'Lord', 'Herd', and 'Bond', i.e. Supreme Being, souls bound in the fetters of finitude, and the three forces binding them, which are Māyā, Āvara or Avidyā, the power of darkness obscuring the native light of the soul, and Karma, the mechanical influence of former works upon present experience. Pure Māyā is almost the same conception as that of Śakti as explained above.

25. So far we have dealt with Nāda and Bindu in their general macrocosmical aspects, but they also play a prominent rôle in the microcosm of the individual. The following account is taken from the *Śiva-sūtra-vimarśinī*¹ of Kṣēmarāja. We have seen (§ 9) that Kuṇḍalinī, or Śakti, resides within the Mūlādhāra, ordinarily sleeping rolled up in coils like a serpent. This serpent-like Kuṇḍalinī surrounds the microcosmic Supreme, who is in the shape of a minute dot of light. The first stage towards enlightenment occurs when a man obtains glimpses of this dot of light. By this the dot is set in motion, and rouses the Kuṇḍalinī, or Śakti, from her sleep. She wakes with a great sound (nāda) and becomes conscious. The soul is thus illuminated by a flash of the supreme light of consciousness. The Śakti, being merely the immanent aspect of the Supreme, is identical with Him. It is this flash of light, or bindu, and this sound of Śakti, or nāda, that are mystically represented by the nāda-bindu of the syllable ōm, written ओॐ, with anunāsika (ॐ), of which the dot represents the bindu, and the semicircle the nāda. By a further extension of the metaphor, this nāda-bindu is thus considered to be a representation of the Ultimate Supreme.

26. Inasmuch as the divine Śakti reveals herself in sound,

¹ A translation of this work by P. T. Shrinivas Iyengar has been published in the Indian Thought Series, Allahabad, 1912.

Word or Logos, the elements of speech, namely the syllables and their combinations, have a profound mystic significance in Śaiva doctrine. Hence there has arisen a copious literature on the mysteries of the letters of the alphabet and their groupings in spells (mantras), of which some idea may be gathered from the paper 'On the Sārādā Alphabet' in Journ. Royal Asiatic Society, October, 1916.

27. Appendix. In the preface to the translation of SS. in the Sacred Books of the Hindus it is suggested that the cakras and other terms of Yōgic anatomy correspond more or less to real parts of the human body, and the following identifications are proposed:—

Citrā : the grey matter of the spinal cord.

Brahma-randhra : the central canal of the spinal cord (but by modern Hindus identified with the anterior fontanelle).

Mūlādhāra : the sacral plexus.

Maṇipūra : the epigastric plexus.

Anāhata : the cardiac plexus.

Viśuddha : the laryngeal or pharyngeal plexus.

Ājñā : the cavernous plexus.

Sahasrāra : the medulla oblongata.

Suṣumnā : the spinal cord.

Piṅgalā : the right sympathetic cord.

1. When by repeated practice (of yōga) the whole expanse (of the visible universe) hath ascended to absorption ;

When the qualified (universe) hath become merged within the Ether ;

When the ethereal Void itself hath become dissolved, then naught but the Weal hath remained.

The true doctrine, O Brāhmaṇa, is but this alone.

2. There is there no word or (thought of) mind. There is there no non-transcendent or transcendent.

Not by vow of silence, not by mystic attitudes, is there entry there.

Not there dwell Śiva and his Śakti.

If there remaineth somewhat, that is what the doctrine teacheth.

1. The universe is here called 'that which has wide expanse', i.e. the wide expanse of creation. In the consciousness of the devotee who has attained to enlightenment it is recognized as being really an illusive emanation from the Supreme, and this recognition causes, to the consciousness of the devotee, its reabsorption in Him. Before the absorption of the universe, it has qualities.

Gagan, the sky, means the wide expanse of empty space, and, hence, the principle of ākāśa, ethereality, or of vacuity, with which it is identified in the third line. Grath is the splash of water upon water, and, just as water falling with a splash into water is utterly united with that into which it falls, so the perception of the visible world is, as it were, at one splash, lost in and becomes one with the Void. This Void is not the ultimate Supreme, but is the first stage in His apparent evolution, in which he associates Himself with Māyā, or cosmic illusion, and thereby becomes subjected to limited individual experience. For further particulars, see the Note on Yōga, § 24 and Vocabulary, s. v. shūñ.

Transcending this stage, the soul loses all consciousness of limited individuality, and becomes absorbed in the Supreme as unlimited pure consciousness and nothing else. This it is that is the aim of the devotee.

2. 'There', i.e. in the Supreme. The kōl, or family (Sanskrit kula), is the group consisting of the jīva (individual soul), prakṛti (primal matter), space, time, ether, earth, water, fire, and air. The akōl is that which transcends these. Hence, kōl-akōl means the totality of all creation, or the visible creation and that which transcends it. For the transcendental meaning of these words, see Note on Yōga, §§ 12, 19.

Vows of silence and the like do not lead directly to Him. The utmost they can do is to lead the mind to that knowledge of the Supreme which brings it into union with Him.

The 'somewhat', i.e. the ineffable Supreme, is not even Śiva and his Śakti, or energetic power, for these have form and name, while the Supreme has neither.

3. With passionate longing did I, Lallā, go forth.

Seeking and searching did I pass the day and night.

Then, lo, saw I in mine own house a learned man,

And that was my lucky star and my lucky moment when I laid hold of him.

4. Slowly, slowly, did I stop my breath in the bellows-pipe (of my throat).

Thereby did the lamp (of knowledge) blaze up within me, and then was my true nature revealed unto me.

I winnowed forth abroad my inner light,

So that, in the darkness itself, I could seize (the truth) and hold it tight.

In these two verses Lallā relates her own spiritual experiences.

3. She had wandered fruitlessly far and wide in search of the truth. In other words, she had made pilgrimages to holy places, and sought for salvation through formal rites, but all in vain. Then suddenly she found it in her own home, i.e. in her own soul. There she found her own Self, which became to her the equivalent of a guru, or spiritual preceptor, and she learned that it and the Supreme Self were one.

4. Suppression of breath is one of the most necessary yōga exercises. See Note on Yōga, § 21, and Vocabulary s. vv. nāḍi and prāṇ, 2. Lallā compares the air-passages to the pipe of a bellows, by gently compressing which the feeble light of a lamp is allowed to blaze up. Otherwise it would be blown out.

It was the light, not the lamp, which she winnowed forth abroad. That is to say, the light which had at first burnt dimly in the inmost recesses of her soul, now suffused her whole being.

He who hath deemed the day (of joy) and the Duality is the considering God and nature to be recognizes that God is all in all, and that all creation, and all experiences, are but modes of Him. For the curious expression sura-guru-nāth for 'the Supreme', see

They who have gained experience of the Knowledge-light,—of that Self which is compact of pure spirit and of bliss,

They, while yet alive, have gained release (from earthly births).

But, to the tangled net of continual rebirth,
Have ignorant fools added knot by knot in hundreds.

Parama Śiva, the Supreme Self, has two aspects, as the Śiva-tattwa and the Śakti-tattwa. The former is pure Spirit, the pure light of Intelligence, without anything to shine upon. The latter is perfect Bliss, the supremest Self-satisfaction, absolute Rest. The ideas of pure Spirit and Bliss therefore comprise the whole idea of the Supreme Deity. The object of the devotee is to gain a perfect knowledge of Him, and to recognize that He is the Absolute Self of all things. The 'ignorant fools' are those who have not acquired this knowledge, and who are therefore born and reborn again. See Kashmir Shaivism, pp. 62, 64.

7. Lord, I have not known myself or other than myself.

Continually have I mortified this vile body.

That Thou art I, that I am Thou, that these are joined in one I knew not.

It is doubt to say, 'Who am I?' and 'Who art Thou?'

Or, if we adopt the alternative readings :—

Lord, I have not recognized myself (as one with Thee).

Continually have I shown affection for this single body.

That Thou art I, &c., as above.

An impassioned declaration of the oneness of the Self with the Supreme Self. Lallā declares that in her ignorance she has not known the true relation of herself to others. In other words, she has clung to the conception of her personal identity, and been ignorant of the real nature of her Self, as only one manifestation of the Supreme. She has worn her body out by attempting to gain salvation by good works, not recognizing that these lead only to further transmigrations and are all in vain. The only hope of salvation is the recognition of the identity of her Self with the Supreme. To wonder who I am, and who He is, i.e. to doubt this identity, is indeed the fatal doubt of doubts.

In the alternative text, the meaning is much the same, though couched in somewhat different language.

By whatever name the worshipper may call the Supreme, He is still the Supreme, and He alone can give release. Kēśava means Viṣṇu; by the name of 'Jina' is indicated both a 'Jina', the Saviour of the Jains, and also the Buddha. I suspect that here it is confused with the Arabic Jinn, the 'genius' of the Arabian nights. The Lotus-born Lord is Brahmā.

Or, if we take the variant reading, the last line would run:—

Then whither did earth, ether, and sky go off (absorbed) together (in vacuity)?

Regarding this verse, see Vocab. s.v. sōm. The moon and the sun represent, respectively, the uppermost and lowest seats of action, or cakras. When, by intense mental absorption, or yōga, these disappear, or cease to be present to consciousness, the devotee is conscious of the existence of nothing except his thinking faculty or mind. When this is finally absorbed in the Supreme, all sense of difference between the individual spirit and the Universal Being is sunk in the all-consuming consciousness of All-Being, All-Light. Arise, O Lady, set out to make thine offering,
 Bearing in thy hand wine, flesh, and cates.

If thou know the syllable that is itself the Supreme Place,

Thou (wilt also know that) if thou violate the custom it is all the same. What loss is there therein?

The lady is a diligent worshipper of Śiva, with all the necessary rites, and is apparently a follower of the left-handed sect, that consumes wine and flesh, and performs less reputable acts as a part of worship, which are not consonant with regular Hindū ācāra, or custom.

Lallā points out that the violation of her Hindū custom, by the performance of these Kaula sacraments, is unobjectionable, or, indeed, praiseworthy, provided she knows the mystic syllable ōm, regarding which, see verse 15. The 'lady' is probably the Śakti abiding in the speaker's own body; see Note on Yōga, § 9. Cf. verse 77.

Holy books will disappear, and then only the mystic formula will remain.

When the mystic formula departed, naught but mind was left.

When the mind disappeared naught was left anywhere,

And a void became merged within the Void.

In its general lines, this closely agrees with verse 9. The void is the apparent material world, which is really empty nothingness, and, when final release is attained, its apparent existence disappears in the Great Transcendental Void, regarding which, see Note on Yōga, § 24, verse 1, and the Vocabulary s.v. shūñ. Lallā is fond of the expression in the last line, and repeats it in verses 30 and 69.

Praise of freedom from desire. The gain or the abandonment of power gives no true respite from care. Only freedom from desire brings content. A man does not grasp the true knowledge till he understand that, even while alive, he should be as one dead (i. e. free from all desire). Cf. verse 87.

God of the dark blue throat! As Thou hast the six, so the same six have I.

And yet, estranged from Thee, into misery have I fallen.

Only this discord was there, that, though betwixt Thee and me there was no difference,

Thou wast the Lord of six, while I by six was led astray.

Śiva is said to have a dark blue throat from the legend of the churning by which the gods extracted immortality-giving nectar from the ocean. The first to come up in the churning was the deadly Kālakūṭa poison, which was swallowed by Śiva to prevent its doing any further harm. The poison dyed his neck dark blue.

Hindū philosophy has numerous groups of six. The Supreme Deity has six attributes, viz. omniscience, contentment, knowledge of the past from eternity, absolute self-sufficiency, irreducible potency, and omnipotence. Lallā exclaims that, though she knew it not, she, as really one with Him, also had these six. But, in her ignorance, while the Supreme was ever master of these six, she was misled by another six. This other six is capable of various interpretations. They may be the six 'enemies', viz. sexual desire, wrath, desire, arrogance, delusion, and jealousy; or they may be the six human infirmities, or the six periods of human life, or the six changes in life, for all of which see the Vocabulary, s. v. śēḥ.

14. Śiva is the horse. Zealously employed upon the saddle is Viṣṇu, and, upon the stirrup, Brahmā.

The Yōgī, by the art of his yōga, will recognize who is the god that will mount upon him as the rider.

15. The ever-unobstructed sound, the principle of absolute vacuity, whose abode is the Void,

Which hath no name, nor colour, nor lineage, nor form,

Which they declare to be (successively transformed into) the Sound and the Dot by its own reflection on itself,—

That alone is the god that will mount upon him.

Siva here is not, like Viṣṇu and Brahmā, the personal deity. He is the 'Śiva-tattva', the first phase of the Supreme in the universe. The Yōgī understands that this is but a manifestation of a deeper Reality of the Absolute Spirit. He is, as it were, but the horse upon which the Supreme rides. The Supreme is described under various mystical names in verse 15. He is the unobstructed sound,—the sacred syllable ōm,—which, once uttered, vibrates in perpetuity (see Vocabulary, s.v. anāhata). His essence is the kha, or sky, i.e. ethereality (cf. verse 1), whose home is in the Void conceived to exist in the Sahasrāra in the sinus of the forehead of the microcosm (cf. again verse 1, and also note on Yōga, §§ 20, 24); nothing whatever can be predicated concerning Him. The 'Sound and the Dot' refer to the theory regarding the first stage of enlightenment. The Supreme resides in a man's subtle body in the form of a minute dot of light, surrounded by coils of His Parā Śakti, or the Supreme Energy. When by yōga, or intense abstract meditation on the Ego, the man gets his first glimpse of this dot, the latter is set in motion, and the Parā Śakti is roused, and awakes with a loud cry. For further particulars, see note on Yōga, §§ 23, 24, 25.

The commentator quotes the following lines on the sacred syllable ōm, which illustrates what is said above:—

uklō ya ēsa uccāras tatra yō 'sau sphuran sthitah |
avyaktānukṛti-prāyō dhwanir varṇaḥ sa kathyatē ||
nāsyōcārāyitā kaścit pratihantā na vidyatē |
swayam uccaratē dēvaḥ prānnām urasi sthitah ||
ēkō nādātmakō varṇaḥ sarva-varṇāvibhāga-vān |
sō 'n-astam-ita-rūpatwād anāhata ihōditah ||

That spoken utterance which continues vibrating there (i.e. at the point of utterance), a sound that mostly has the semblance of inarticulateness, is the syllable (ōm).

There is no one who causes it to be uttered, and no one who checks it. The God dwelling in the human breast utters it Himself.

This one syllable consisting of the Nāda and containing all syllables without distinction, is here called 'unobstructed' because its nature is imperishable.

Lo ! By it all things, whether with life or without it, the universe itself, are seen as only Śiva.

Just as the sun reduces ice and snow to identity with water, so the sun of true knowledge makes the soul recognize not only its identity with the Supreme, but also that the whole universe is one, conjured forth out of the Absolute by the divine Māyā. See Note on Yōga, § 24.

Though thou hast knowledge, be thou as a fool;
though thou canst see, be thou as he that is one-eyed;

Though thou canst hear, be thou as one dumb;
in all things be thou as a non-sentient block.

Whatever any one may say to thee, say thou the same to him (or, if we read bōz, whatever any one may say to thee, listen thou and agree).

It is this that is the true practice for obtaining the knowledge of the basal truths.

For the basal truths, or fundamental and general factors of which the apparent universe consists, see Vocabulary, s. v. tattva, We may compare Kabīr's famous advice :—

sab-sē hiliyē sab-sē miliyē sab-kā lījiyē nām
'hā jī', 'hā jī', sab-sē kahiye basiyē apnē gām

Meet every one in a friendly way,
 Greet every one by name.
 Say 'yes Sir', 'yes Sir', to each one who addresses you.
 But live in your own village (i.e. stick to your own opinions).

The day will be extinguished, and night will come ;

The surface of the earth will become extended to the sky ;

On the day of the new moon, the moon swallowed up the demon of eclipse.

The illumination of the Self in the organ of thought is the true worship of Śiva.

Once the mind realizes the true nature of the Self, as one with the Supreme Self, here given the name of Śiva, all things fade into nothingness. There is no distinction between day and night, and the boundaries of the apparently solid earth merge into those of the sky, so that earth and sky become one. Nay, the demon of eclipse is eclipsed himself.

According to Hindū tradition, the moon contains sixteen digits, each containing a certain amount of nectar. Each day the gods drink the nectar in one digit, so that on the sixteenth day only one digit remains. This accounts for the waning of the moon. The nectar of the sixteenth day is that which remains over on the day of the new moon. On the occasion of a solar eclipse, the moon and the sun are together, and the nectar of the sixteenth digit, becoming heated and caused to evaporate by the proximity of the sun, ascends into that luminary. Rāhu, the demon of eclipse, then swallows the sun in order to drink the nectar. So much for the tradition explanatory of the natural phenomenon. Here Lallā describes the process of absorption in the Sahasrāra (see note on Yōga, § 21). To the fully enlightened soul, the day of earthly illusion disappears, and all is night; the apparently solid earth loses its bounds, and becomes merged in the sky; in the illumination of the Self, so far from Rāhu swallowing (the nectar of) the moon, it is the moon in the Sahasrāra that swallows the dark demon of ignorance.

There is also a more mystical side to this verse. Normally there is a distinction between the subject of cognition (pramātar), the object of cognition (pramēya), and the instrument of cognition (pramāṇa). The pramātar is here typified by Rāhu, the demon of lunar eclipse, the pramēya by the moon, and the pramāṇa by the sun.¹ The thinker is able to 'swallow the moon', i. e. to think away the phenomenal world into a blank ; but he cannot completely dissolve it, for there still exists the triad of pramātar, pramēya, and pramāṇa, until the Parā Saṁvid, or Higher Consciousness, is attained, by which all three are fused together and sublimated into a void of infinite Unity. Lallā here refers to the presence of Parā Saṁvid. Whereas in ordinary meditation 'Rāhu swallows the moon', i. e. the thinker effaces the phenomenal world, the Higher Consciousness (typified by the moon residing in Sahasrāra ; see note on Yōga, §§ 19, 20) absorbs the consciousness of the thinker into itself, entirely sublimating its contents into Void.

Look upon thy mind alone as the ocean of existence,

If thou restrain it not, but let it loose, from its rage will issue angry words, like wounds caused by fire.

Yet, if thou weigh them in the scales of truth, their weight is naught.

According to legend, a terribly destructive fire, named vaḥlavāgni, is imprisoned at the bottom of the ocean. If it were to burst forth, the whole world would be destroyed. Similarly, if the fire of wrath burst forth from the ocean of the mind, it would leave deadly scars, and yet, to the wise man, it is nothing.

If, instead of nārūc^ū chōkh, we read nārātsⁱ-chōkh, which could be spelt in Nāgarī with identically the same letters, we must substitute 'wounds caused by a fishing-spear' for 'wounds caused by fire'. Otherwise the meaning of the verse would be the same.

By (controlling) my vital airs I cut my way through the six forests, till the digit of the moon awoke for me, and the material world dried up within me.

With the fire of love I parched my heart as a man parcheth grain,

And at that moment did I obtain Śiva.

In the spiritual body of a man there are six cakras, or seats of a śakti, impelling him to experience the objective universe and to look upon it as real. These must be mastered before true enlightenment is reached, and Lallā compares the process to cutting a way through six forests. A mystical moon, the abode of the Supreme Śiva, is supposed to exist under the frontal sinus, and, once he has mastered the six cakras, the devotee becomes cognisant of this moon and is absorbed in the Śiva.

The mastery is effected by control and suppression of the vital airs (see Vocab., s. v. prāṇ 2), and the exciting cause is ardent love, or desire, for Śiva. For further particulars, see Vocab., s. vv. śēh and sōm, and Note on Yōga, §§ 9 ff. and 21.

Or, if we adopt the alternative reading of the last two lines, we must translate them :—

If a man hath not known how to seize the horse by the bridle, the wheels (of the chariot) of his outward and inward vital airs have burst in pieces.

As explained in the notes on the preceding verse, self-realization is obtained by mastering the vital airs. The two principal airs are the outward and the inward, known as prāṇa and apāṇa. See Vocabulary, s. v. prāṇ, 2, and Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 16, 23.

By eating and apparelling the mind will not become at peace.

They only have ascended who have abandoned false hopes.

When they have learnt from the scriptures that the fear of Yama is terrible (to him who is in debt to Desire),

And when the lender hath trusted them not (with a loan), then indeed live they blessed and at peace.

Or, if we adopt the alternative reading, the first two lines must be translated:—

They only who have kept their minds from eating and apparel, and who have abandoned false hopes, will ascend.

Yama is the judge of the soul after death. Desire is compared to a money-lender, who gives a loan of fruition, but demands a hard repayment of principal and interest. Happy indeed is the contented soul to whom he refuses to make the loan.

Quietism and self-command are not required for (the knowledge of) the Self,

Nor by the mere wish wilt thou reach the door of final release.

E'en though a man become absorbed (in his contemplations) as salt is absorbed in water,

Ordinary ascetism, and even ardent desire, are common enough, but without the knowledge of the true nature of Self, they are of no avail for ultimate release.

‘Sleep’ is the sleep of illusion. ‘Uncleanness’ is impurity of soul. All action is defilement, and hinders the soul from obtaining final release. But, says Lallā, the real freedom from action is that of the soul. The body may be a slave to duty, and yet the soul may be free.

He who hath recognized the Brahma-randhra as the shrine of the Self-God,

He who hath known the Unobstructed Sound borne upon the breath (that riseth from the heart) unto the nose,

His vain imaginings of themselves have fled far away,

And he himself (recognizeth) himself as the God. To whom else, therefore, should he offer worship?

The 'Unobstructed Sound' is the mystic syllable ōm, for a full account of which, and for the meaning of this allusion, see the notes on verse 15. Dvādashānta-maṇḍal, or, in Sanskrit dvādaśānta-maṇḍala, is the Brahma-randhra (see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 7, 19, 21, 26). As a technical term it is said at the present day to be a spot or cavity in the anterior fontanelle of the brain, under the frontal sinus. Other authorities identify it with the central canal of the spinal cord. It is closely connected with the Sahasrāra, which, in each man, is the abode of the Supreme Śiva, who is to be recognized as one with the Self, i.e. as the Supreme Self. Hence, if a man recognize this, he knows that he himself is the Supreme Self within himself, and that it is unnecessary to worship any other deity.

He from whose navel steadfastly proceedeth in its upward course the syllable ōm, and naught but it,

And for whom the kumbhaka exercise formeth a bridge to the Brahma-randhra,

He beareth in his mind the one and only mystic spell,

And of what benefit to him are a thousand spells?

Or, if we take the alternative reading of the second line, that line must be translated :—

And whom the kumbhaka exercise leadeth into the abode of the moon by the Brahma-randhra.

This verse, like the preceding, is in praise of the mystic syllable ōm, which is here stated to possess all the virtues of all other mystic syllables, or spells, put together. By the 'navel' is meant the kanda, or mysterious bulb supposed to exist in the region of the navel and the pudendum. It is the focal centre of all bodily thought and action, and from it radiate the various tubes through which circulate the vital airs. In the true devotee, the syllable is fixed here, and perpetually rises upwards (as stated in the preceding verse) from the heart.

The kumbhaka or 'jar' exercise consists in meditation accompanied by 'bottling up' or retaining the breath after inspiration (pūraka). The devotee by this suppression blocks up the vital airs circulating through the tubes radiating from the kanda, and thereby causes the organ of thought to become absorbed into Śiva represented by the mystical moon supposed to exist in his brain. For further explanation of this extremely recondite theory, see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21, and Vocabulary, s. v. sōm.

Regarding the Brahma-randhra, see the note on the preceding verse. It is situated close to the Sahasrāra, which is the abode of the moon (see Note on Yōga, §§ 8, 19).

Praise of perfect contentment. The idiom of marēṁ na kūḥ is worth noting. Literally it is 'no one will die for me', or, as we should say in Ireland 'no one will die on me', i.e. if any one die it will not be my business. The commentary here quotes the following verse of Utpala Dēva [Śiva-stōtrāvalī, xiii. 3] as to the point:—

To stop a flowing stream, to cool a raging fire,
To walk on one's feet in the sky,
To labour at milking a wooden cow,—
All these, in the end, are but base jugglery.

, By means of intense yōga, or concentration of the mind, it is quite possible to achieve magical powers (vibhūti: see note on Yōga, § 2), and to perform apparently impossible actions; but this is nothing but the art of a conjurer. The true yōgī disdains such miraculous powers. The yōga to which he devotes himself is union with the Supreme Self, by acquiring the knowledge of his own Self.

39. Who is the man, and who the woman, that bringeth wreaths?

What flowers shouldst thou offer in His worship?

What stream of water wilt thou pour over His image?

By what mystic formula will the Śiva-Self become manifest?

40. The mind is the man, and pure desire is the woman, that bringeth wreaths.

Offer thou the flowers of devotion in His worship.

Nectar of the moon, for ritual, shalt thou make to stream over Him.

By the mystic formula of silence will the Śiva-Self become manifest.

A plea for spiritual, as against formal worship. The nectar from the moon refers to the mystic moon in the saḥasrāra (cf. verse 33) said to abide under the frontal sinus. From this moon a mystic nectar passes into the spiritual frame of the devotee, and enables him to become master of himself. For further particulars, see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 8, 19, 20, 21, and Vocabulary, s. v. sōm.

The mystic formula, or mantra, of silence is the so-called ajapa mantra, in which the devotee utters no sound, but simply performs various exhalations and inhalations. It is also called haṁsaḥ (cf. verse 65), in which word the anusvāra or bindu represents Puruṣa, and the visarga Prakṛti. The Tāntrika-abhidhāna (s. v.) defines ajapā as haṁsa, or inspiration + expiration (śvāsa-praśvāsa), saying that 60 śvāsas = 1 prāṇa, 60 prāṇas = 1 nāḍī, 60 nāḍīs = 1 ahorātra (day and night). Thus in one day-night there are 21,600 śvāsa-praśvāsas, or haṁsa-japas.

To what quarter shall I go? and how shall I know the road?

In the end, if I gain the good counsel (it is well),

For there is no substance in an empty breath.

Absorbed within Thyself, Thou remainedst hidden from me.

The livelong day I passed seeking for 'me' and 'Thee'.

When I beheld Thee in my Self,

I gave to Thee and to my Self the unrestrained rapture of (our union).

(In the second meaning, the two words mē and ṭē, 'I Thee', are taken as one word mēṭē, which means 'earth', and we get the following translation :—)

My body befouled I with mud, and Thou remainedst hidden from me.

The livelong day I passed seeking for mud.

When I beheld the mud upon my body,

I gave my body the unrestrained rapture (of union) with the mud.

In the first version, Lallā tells us how, in the days of her ignorance, she imagined that she could distinguish between her Self and the Supreme Self, and then, how, when she had discovered their identity, she was filled with the rapture of union. Moreover, as the Supreme Self was identical with her Self, He also was filled with the same rapture.

In the second version she sarcastically compares earthly possessions and desires to the mud with which an ascetic daubs his body. He who cares for these has all the joys of possession, ignorant of the truth that they are worthless as mud.

By him who taketh into heart with honest faith his teacher's word.

In his own loving longing he will ever meditate upon Śambhu.

Action—works, desire—is the great enemy of absorption into the Supreme, and causes perpetual rebirth. By recognizing the identity of the Self with the Supreme, as taught by the guru, or spiritual teacher, a man becomes free from the bond of action.

Śambhu is a name of Śiva.

'The Kingdom of heaven is within you.'

The ascetic wanders about to holy places and torments his body in his search for God. He knows not that all the time He is the ascetic's Self, and is hence ever close at hand. When the ascetic performs the most trivial action, it is really not he who does it, but the Supreme, Who is identical with his Self.

The real insignificance of the universe. As compared with the Universal Self it is of no account; yet foolish mortals look upon it as something wonderful, and enjoy it. Life, too, is but a momentary breath, as compared with eternity; and, in reality, an unsaved soul, in whatever form it may be born, has no time to live, but, from the point of view of Eternity, lives for but an instant, and dies and dies, and is born and reborn; again and again.

48. I, Lallā, wearied myself seeking for Him and searching.

I laboured and strove even beyond my strength.

I began to look for Him, and, lo, I saw that bolts were on His door,

And even in me, as I was, did longing for Him become fixed; and there, where I was, I gazed upon Him.

49. Foulness burnt I from my soul.

My heart (with its desires) did I slay.

And then did my name of Lallā spread abroad,
When I sat, just there, with bended knee.

48. Ineffectual human efforts. In her unregenerate days Lallā had striven to find God. Then, by God's grace, she was permitted to see that the door of approach to Him was barred to all human effort, and that no strivings of hers were of avail. So she stood there, outside the door, full of naught but longing love, and He revealed Himself to her, for she found Him in her Self.

49. A continuation of the preceding verse. When she had given up effort, and, having cleansed her mind from earthly passions, waited in patience with humility; then, and not till then, did she gain the true wisdom, and her reputation as a prophetess became widely spread.

(From the printed edition. The last syllable of tathāḥkadāham is lengthened before the cæsura; cf. verses 32 and 56.)]

Three times do I remember a lake overflowing.

Once do I remember seeing in the firmament the only existing place.

Once do I remember seeing a bridge from Haramukh to Kaūsar.

Seven times do I remember seeing the whole world a void.

As a result of her having achieved the perfect knowledge, not only, as told in the preceding verse, has she gained a great reputation, but she has become endued with the power of remembering the occurrences of her former lives.

At intervals of a kalpa (i.e. a day of Brahmā, or 432 million years) the universe incurs a partial dissolution (khaṇḍa-pralaya). A hundred years of Brahmā—each year being made up of these kalpas, or days of Brahmā—constitutes a mahā-kalpa, or great kalpa. At the end of this vast period of time there is a 'great dissolution' (mahā-pralaya) in which not only is our universe destroyed, but all the worlds of the gods with their inhabitants, and even Brahmā himself.

The lake mentioned by Lallā is, as in verse 47, the universe. By its overflow is meant a partial dissolution, three of which she remembers experiencing. When the only place that exists is the firmament, it is a great dissolution, and she remembers seeing one of these.

Between the peak of Haramukh to the North and the mountain lake of Kaūsar to the South, lies the Valley of Kashmīr. At the beginning of the kalpa now current this Valley is said to have been a lake called Satīsaras, and across this lake, from Haramukh to Kaūsar, she remembers a bridge.¹

Seven times altogether she remembers seeing the world becoming absorbed into the Void (cf. Note to Verse 1).

Lallā's object in mentioning these experiences over such enormous periods of time is to emphasize the eternal pre-existence of the soul, and its perpetual birth and rebirth unless released by the true knowledge.

Cf. Verses 93 and 95.

¹ Cf. Rāja-taraṅgiṇī, i. 25. 'Formerly, since the beginning of the Kalpa, the land in the womb of the Himālaya was filled with water during the periods of the [first] six Manus [and formed] the 'Lake of Satī' (Satīsaras). Afterwards . . . Kaśyapa . . . created the land known by the name of Kaśmīr in the space [previously occupied by] the lake.' Stein's Translation.

51. Comely and full of sap were they born from the mother,

After causing many a pang to her womb.

Again and again thither did they come, and waited at that door.

Hardly, in sooth, is Śiva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

52. The same rock that serveth for a pedestal or for a pavement Really is but (part of) a district of the earth.

Or the same rock may become (a millstone) for a handsome mill.

Hardly, in sooth, is Śiva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

53. Doth not the sun cause (everything) to glow in every region ?

Doth it cause only each good land to glow ?

Doth not Varuṇa enter into every house ?

Hardly, in sooth, is Śiva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

54. The same woman is a mother, and giveth milk unto her babe.

The same woman, as a wife, hath her special character.

The same woman, as a deceiver, endeth by taking thy life.

Hardly, in sooth, is Śiva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

A group of verses linked together by their fourth lines, which are identical in each. Verse 80 belongs also to this group.

51. The soul, while still in the womb of its mother, remembers its former births, and determines to seek release from future transmigration as soon as it is born. But directly it is born it forgets all this, and, becoming entangled in worldly desires, is condemned to visit wombs again and again, and to wait at their doors for admission again into the world. Cf. Verse 87.

As the attainment of Śiva is thus hard for a mortal once he is born, Lallā entreats him to heed her doctrine, and thus to obtain release.

52. All things are but forms of the Supreme. She uses as a parable the fact that though a pedestal, a pavement, a tract of land, or a millstone, may all differ widely in appearance, at bottom they are all the same—only stone.

53. Another parable showing the universality of the Supreme. He is everywhere without exception, just as the sun shines impartially on every spot in the earth, and just as Varuṇa, the god of water, is found in every house, and not only in the houses of the good. The facts described are those mentioned in Matt. v. 45, but the application is different.

54. Another parable to the same effect. The infinite variety of a woman, as a mother, as a wife, or as a Delilah. Yet she is, throughout all, the same—a woman. The Sanskrit translation makes the Delilah to be the śakti, which misleads people from the truth, appearing at one time as a mother, and at another as a wife, but always a misleader.

Some have abandoned home, some have abandoned hermitage ;

But fruitless is every abiding-place, if thou hast not thy mind under subjection.

 As thou art, so there abide.

Some, in the hope of salvation, have abandoned house and home for a hermit's life, and others, in a like hope, have given up such a life, and have become ordinary householders. But it matters not where one lives, so long as one applies oneself to learning the mysteries of Self. 56. O my Teacher! Thou who art as God to me!

Explain thou to me the inner meaning; for it is known to thee.

Two breathings are there, both taking their rise in the City of the Bulb.

Why then is h^ah cold, and hāh hot?

57. The region of the navel is by nature fiery hot.

Thence proceedeth thy vital air, rising to thy throat, (and issueth from thy mouth as hāh).

When it meeteth the river flowing from the Brahma-randhra (it issueth from thy mouth as h^ah),

And therefore h^ah is cold, and hāh is hot.

These two verses refer to the practice of prāṇāyāma, or suppressing the breath in order to obtain yōga, or union with the Supreme. Expiration and inhalation are carefully watched and controlled by the yōgī. Lallū notices that some of her expirations, which she names h^ah, are cool, while others, which she calls hāh, are hot. She addresses her guru, or spiritual teacher, whom she has been taught, like all devotees, to recognize as the representative to her of God.

In order to understand the reply, it must be explained that, according to Śaiva teaching, situated within the body, between the pudendum and the navel, is a kanda, or bulb, the focus of all bodily action, from which radiate the various nāḍis, or tubes, through which circulate the prāṇas, or vital airs. This kanda is called kandā-purā, or 'City of the Bulb', in verse 56, and nābi-sthān, or that which has its position near the navel, in verse 57. One of the vital airs—called the prāṇa κατ' ἐξοχήν—rises directly from the kanda through the windpipe, and is expired through the mouth. Hence it is hot. For further particulars, see the Note on Yōga, § 5, and the Vocabulary, s. vv. kandā-purā, nāḍi, and prāṇ, 2. So much for the hot air.

The Brahma-randhra is the anterior fontanelle in the upper part of the head (§§ 5, 27). Near this is the śaṣṭrāra (§§ 19, 20, 21, 27), a spot which is the upper extremity of the tube called the suṣumnā nāḍi, the other extremity of which is the kanda already mentioned.

This sahasrāra is considered to be the abode of that emanation of the Supreme Śiva which is the man's Self, and which is mystically spoken of as the moon. The moon is universally looked upon as the source of coldness, and hence the vital air passing down the sūṣumnā nāḍi is cold. When this meets the hot air, prāṇa, coming upwards from the kūṇḍa (close to which is the microcosmic sun, §§ 5, 8, 9, 21), this prāṇa is deprived of its heat by contact with the down-flowing stream, and hence, in this case, the expired air is cold. For further particulars, see the Vocabulary, s. v. sōm.

Hāh is a short abrupt expiration, and hūh is a prolonged one; and at the bottom of the teacher's explanation lies the idea that in the short expiration the hot upward current of air suddenly meets the downward current of cold air, and is checked by it. Hence it is cooled. On the other hand, a prolonged expiration has time to recover itself and to regain its heat. The sun is located in the pelvis, and so the upward breath is hot; and the moon is at the brain, and its currents are downwards and cold.

There is no 'Thou', no 'I', no object of contemplation, not even contemplation.

It is only the All-Creator, who Himself became lost in forgetfulness.

The blind folk saw not any meaning in this,

But when they saw the Supreme, the seven worlds became lost in nothingness.

All that exists is but the Supreme in one or other of His manifestations. When, therefore, an untaught man knows not the unity of Self and all creation with the Supreme Self, and imagines that there is a difference between 'I' and 'thou', or between contemplation and its object, it is really the Supreme, temporarily blinded by His own illusive power, Who is lost in this ignorance. This paradox, and the logical inference to be derived from it cannot be understood by the blind, i. e. those who are sunk in ignorance of the nature of things. But when a man has once grasped the facts, the whole universe disappears for him, and he gains release.

The last line may also be translated, 'but good men become absorbed in Him, when once they gain sight of the Supreme.' So interpreted by Rājānaka Bhāskara.

(From the printed edition. The third half-line does not scan, the metre being Śārdūlavikrīḍita. The u of anu should be long. As it falls on the cæsura, possibly the author intended it to be long by metrical licence. There are similar cases in his translations of verses 32, 50, and 56; cf. also verse 45.)]

I searched for myself, and wearied myself in vain,

For no one hath, I ween, e'er by such efforts reached the hidden knowledge.

Then absorbed I myself in It, and straightway reached the abode of nectar,

Where there are many filled jars, but no one drinketh from them.

No human efforts can gain the perfect knowledge. This is obtained only by quietism and the grace of the Supreme. 'It' in which Lallā became absorbed is the tat of the famous Upaniṣadic formula tat tvam asi, 'thou art It', the essence of the Śaiva doctrines. Once she had grasped the identity of her Self with the Supreme Self, she reached the Al-thān. This word means literally 'the abode of wine', i. e. nectar. The abode of nectar is the moon, in which nectar is produced month by month. As explained under verses 56, 57, and in the Note on Yōga, § 19, a mystic moon, representing the Supreme, exists in the spot in the brain called the sahasrāra. By practising yōga, a devotee is finally absorbed microcosmically into the sahasrāra, and macrocosmically into the Supreme. Lallā laments that so few avail themselves of this means of salvation. The wine of salvation is there, but few there be that drink of it.

The pronominal suffix m in wōtum is a kind of dativus commodi, and means 'in my opinion'.

Al-thān is also explained as a contraction of alam-sthāna, the place of 'enough', where everything is exactly balanced, and which can only be described by negation of all qualifications, 'nēti, nēti', i. e. the Supreme. In either interpretation the resultant meaning is the same.

The vanity of human wishes. The ordinary worldling performs actions for the sake of what he may gain by them; but these gains cannot follow him to another world. They are left behind to his 'laughing heirs'.

The true believer, without thought of reward, does his duty, and offers all that he does to God; and it is he who after death reaps the full fruit of his actions in the shape of final release. This is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Bhagavad Gītā. If a man engages in worldly affairs for the lusts of the flesh, he damns his soul; if he takes them up without regard to their fruits, solely from the sense of duty (karma-yōga) and the love of God (bhakti-yōga), he saves his soul.

He who gaineth paradise is he who mortifieth

That which reapeth the fruit of virtue and of vice is a man's own Self.

Every action has its fruit. The exercise of worldly activity produces worldly prosperity. If a man pursues a formal religion, he reaps the fruit in paradise, which is transient, and from which, when the fruits of his pious actions have been exhausted, he will be subject to rebirth.

The one hope of ultimate release is the acquirement of the true knowledge of the Self, and this can only be acquired from the teaching of a Śaiva Guru, or spiritual preceptor.

The way of knowledge is a garden of herbs.

Thou must enclose it with the hedge of quietism and self-restraint and pious deeds.

Thus will thy former deeds be offered like beasts at the Mothers' sacrifice,

And, by steady eating of its crop, the garden will become empty and bare.

Deeds are of two kinds,—the deeds of former lives, of which the accumulated results still persist, and the deeds done in the present life. Both kinds have results, through the action of the endless chain of cause and effect, and so long as these results continue to exist, ultimate release is impossible.

In the garden of knowledge, the herbs are the deeds of the present life. It must be carefully guarded from outside temptations by the performance of the daily obligatory religious rites and the practice of quietism and self-restraint. In this garden are allowed to browse the goats destined to sacrifice, typifying the works of former lives, the fruits of which are the existing crop—the deeds of the present life. Hemmed in by the hedge of holy works, the goats are compelled to eat this crop, or, in other words, the works of former lives are compelled to render themselves unfruitful. This unfruitfulness is consummated by the sacrifice of the goats, and when that is accomplished the soul becomes assimilated to the Supreme Void, the Śūnya. See Vocabulary, s. v. shūñ.

A Lāmā is one of the divine Mothers, to whom animals are offered in sacrifice. See Vocabulary, s. v. lāmā, for further particulars.

Choose ye a home-life, or choose ye a hermitage.

Then, as thou wilt know, so wilt thou be.

Freedom from desire and knowledge of the nature of the Self give ultimate release, whether a man lead the life of a householder or bury himself in a hermitage. The mode of life is immaterial. With this knowledge, his own soul becomes assimilated to his conception of the nature of the Supreme; and he becomes spiritually one with Him.

He who ever calleth on the name of Śiva and Even if night and day he remain busy with his worldly calling,

And who without thought for fruits maketh his mind non-dualist,

On him alone is ever gracious the Lord of the Chiefest of gods.

The Way of the Swan is a mystic name for the celebrated formula sō 'ham, I am He (cf. the tat tvam asi, thou art It, of verse 60). In Sanskrit letters, if the words sō 'ham be reversed, they become haṁsaḥ, a word which means 'swan'. Hence the origin of the term. The devout believer must perform his necessary religious duties, but, as explained under verse 61, without thought of the reward that they may bring. Haṁsa is a term often applied to the Supreme Śiva dwelling in the Sahasrâra and identical with the individual soul (see Note on Yōga, § 20). The full title, in this sense, is Parama-haṁsa. The word is also used to indicate the Ajapa mantra. See verse 40.

The non-dualist mind is that which fully recognizes the identity of the Self with the Supreme Self,—that all is one, not two, or manifold.

all for thyself.

Hast thou sown such seed that it will bear abounding fruit?

Fool! teaching proffered to thee is but balls flung at a boundary-pillar.

It is all lost, as though sweet stuff were fed unto a tawny bullock.

Just as a degraded Camār, whose whole occupation is with that which is dead and foul, cares for a hide by cutting it into its intended shape and pegging it out to dry, so the worldly man cherishes his body, which itself is but a hide, and stretches it out over the world of enjoyment with the pegs of desire. On the other hand, the wise man is like a decent husbandman. He sows the living seed that shall spring up and bear the harvest of spiritual blessing.

Instruction given to the foolish worldly man returns to the giver, as a ball in the game of hockey bounds back from one of the goal-pillars.

To give instruction to such a person is as much lost labour as it is to feed a lusty bullock with sweetmeats in the hope of increasing its milk. 'Bullock's milk' is a common phrase used to indicate a hoped-for but impossible result. Here the fool not only believes in its existence but tries to increase its yield. Gēr, molasses, is often given to a cow to increase her milk. The fool tries it on a bullock.

And there, O Joy! saw I Śiva seated united with His Śakti.

There became I absorbed in the lake of nectar.

Now, what can (existence) do unto me? For, even though alive, I shall in it be dead.

The first line contains a paronomasia. The word sōman may be the Persian word meaning 'jasmine', or may be the Indian word meaning 'my own mind' or 'soul'. We have attempted to indicate this in the translation.

Śiva united in one with His Śakti, or energetic power, is the highest form of the Supreme Self. The lake of nectar is a metaphor for the bliss of union with the Supreme. Drowned in this, though alive, Lallā is as it were dead, and is certain of release from future birth, life, or death.

By ardent practice did I bring together the vital airs of my ten nāḍis.

And a void became merged within the Void.

The rein by which she holds back the steed of her thought is the absence of desire.

The nāḍis are the tubes in the body through which the vital airs are believed to circulate, and it is the devotee's object to bring these airs under subjection. See the Vocabulary s. vv. nāḍi and prān, 2, and Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21.

The mystic moon in the sahasrāra has been explained above under verses 40 and 56, 57. When the devotee has completely blocked the circulation of his vital airs, this moon distils nectar, as there explained. See also Note on Yōga, §§ 8, 19, 21, 22.

73. A royal chowry, sunshade, chariot, throne, Happy revels, the pleasures of the theatre,
 a bed of cotton down,—

Bethink thee which of these is lasting in this world,

And how can it take from thee the fear of death.

74. In thy illusion why didst thou sink in the stream of the ocean of existence?

When thou hadst destroyed the high-banked road, there came before thee the slough of spiritual darkness.

At the appointed time will Yama's apparitors drag thee off in woful plight.

Who can take from thee the fear of death?

75. Works two are there, and causes three. On them practise thou the kumbhaka-yōga.

Then, in another world, wilt thou gain the mark of honour.

Arise, mount, pierce through the sun's disk.

Then will flee from thee the fear of death.

76. Clothe thou thy body in the garb of knowledge.

Brand thou on thy heart the verses that Lallā spake.

With the help of the pranava Lallā absorbed herself

In union with the Soul-light, and so expelled the fear of death.

These four verses form a group.

73. The chowry, or fly-whisk, and the sunshade are emblems of royalty. So strong is this feeling about the sunshade, or, in plain English, the umbrella, that some years ago a serious riot took place in southern India, due to the fact that some low-caste people had taken to going about with cheap cotton umbrellas imported from England. People of such castes had no right to protect themselves from the sun or rain!

74. The high-banked road is the way of truth, by which the Self is enabled to approach the Supreme Self. These high embanked roads across marshy country are common features of a Kāshmīrī landscape.

Yama is the god who rules the land of shades. His apparitors carry off the soul after death for judgement by him, cruelly treating it on the way. Chōra-dārē karun is the name of a punishment, in which the criminal is dragged along the ground till the blood flows from his body in streams.

75. Works are of two kinds, good and bad. There are three causes of the apparent existence of the material world, which are technically known as malas or impurities. These are (1) āvara-mala, or the impurity due to the soul deeming itself to be finite; (2) māyīya-mala, or the impurity due to the cognition that one thing is different from another; and (3) kārma-mala, resulting in action—the producer of pleasure and pain.

It is the devotee's business to destroy the fruits of all works, whether good or bad, and to destroy these malas. This he does by practising yōga. One important form of yōga is the kumbhaka-yōga, in which the breath is entirely suspended. Kōmbith literally means 'bottling up (the breath)'. Cf. verse 34, and see the Vocabulary, s. vv. kūran and kumbh. The disembodied soul, on its way to emancipation, is said to pass through the sun's orb on its way to union with the Supreme.

76. The pranava is one of the names of the mystic syllable ōm, for which see verses 14, 15.

See remarks on verse 10.]

Ah! thou hasty one, feed thou those fatted rams—the five principles of experience—on the grain and cates of spiritual meditation, and then slay them.

Not till then wilt thou gain the knowledge of the place of the Supreme, and (thou wilt also know that) if thou violate custom it is all the same, and causeth thee no loss.

Lallā is said to have made a practice of going about in a nude condition, 'for', said she, 'he only is a man who fears God, and there are few such about'. See verse 94 and the note to K. Pr., p. 20, below. This verse appears to be an answer of hers to some woman who remonstrated with her for not following the usual customs in regard to female dress.

The five bhūtas, or mahābhūtas, are the five factors constituting the principles of experience of the sensible universe. They are solidity, liquidity, formativity, aeriality, and vacuity. For further particulars, see the Vocabulary, s. v. būth, 2.

Just as a ram fattened on fruits and such like has but the smallest beginning in his mother's womb, and grows to great size and vigour before he is ready for sacrifice, so these principles are developed from earlier, subtle, capacities (tanmātras), and under the influence of the chain of cause and effect, which result in illusion (māyā), become powerful and conceal from the soul its knowledge of its real Self.

In order to attain to true knowledge, the seeker must first certify to himself the essential nothingness of these five bhūtas, and cause them to disappear one by one from his experience, by meditating on, and realizing, the nature of Self. Just as a fatted ram is prepared for sacrifice and death by feeding it on grain and cakes, so these must be prepared for disappearance by this meditation and realization.

The 'violation of custom' is literally 'the left-handed conduct' and there is probably a suggestion of the vāma-mārga, or left-handed, Kaula, ritual. Cf. the last line of verse 10.

[The following is the text of 78 and 79 in Stein B (in which they have no number :—

कुसो ङङ्गि त कुसो जागि कुसो सर् वचि तिलिया
 कुसो हरस् [पूजि लागि]

In this verse the MS. is worm-eaten, and four akṣaras are destroyed in the third line. These I have supplied from verse 79. They are enclosed in brackets.

मन् डङ्गि ता अकल् जागि

78. Who is he that is wrapped in sleep, and who is he that is awake?

What lake is that which continually oozeth away?

What is that which a man may offer in worship to Hara?

What is that supreme station to which thou wilt attain?

79. The mind is he who is wrapped in sleep, and when it hath transcended the kula it is he who is awake.

The five organs are the lake that continually oozeth away.

That holy thing which a man may offer in worship to Hara is the discrimination of the Self.

That supreme station to which thou wilt attain is the Spirit-Śiva.

78. Hara is a name of Śiva, the personal form of the impersonal Supreme.

79. The manas, or mind, is, roughly speaking, the thinking faculty. For a more accurate description, see the Vocabulary, s. v. man.

The kula, or family, is a group of the following essentials for the experience of the existence of the Self, as distinct from the Supreme Self:—(1) the individual soul; (2) Prakṛti, or primal matter,—that on which the individual soul acts, and which reacts on it; (3) space—i. e. the conception of limitation in space; (4) time—i. e. the conception of limitation in time; and (5-9) the five bhūtas, or principles of experience, as described under verse 77. When the mind transcends these, and recognizes its Self as one with the limitless Supreme Self, it is in a state of grace, or, as here said, it is awake. The commentary quotes here the following lines; the first is anonymous, and the rest = Bhagavad Gītā, ii. 69:—

mana ēva manuṣyānām kāraṇam bandha-mōkṣayōḥ ॥ yā nīśā sarva-bhūtānām tasyām jāgati saṁyamī ॥ yasyām jāgrati bhūtāni sā nīśā paśyatō munēḥ ॥

It is the mind alone that is the cause of men's entanglement and of their release.

In that which to all embodied beings is night, doth the ascetic remain awake,

And that in which they wake, is the night for the saint who hath eyes to see.

The five organs, or principles, of action are those of generation, excretion, locomotion, handling, and expression by voice. The continual exercise of these takes away the power of Self-realization.

If I had known how by my mind to bring into subjection my nādis,

How to cut, how to bind up; then should I have known how to crush sorrow,

And gradually to compound the Great Elixir.

Hardly, in sooth, is Śiva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

As previously explained (see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21, and verse 69), the nāḍis are the tubes through which the vital airs circulate. It is the devotee's business to bring the latter under control. Batun waṭun, cutting and binding up, is the Kāshmīrī term for operative surgery. Lallā implies that this must be performed upon the mind, which must be cut away from the organs of action (see the preceding Verse), and bound up by self-restraint and quietism.

The Elixir of Life is, of course, the knowledge of the Self.

For the final line, compare verses 51-54.

However oft I quaffed that wine—the water of the Sindhu,

However many parts I played upon the stage,
 However many lumps of human flesh I ate,

Still I am the same Lallā, and what profit was it all to me?

She had been born again and again, but in former births she had not known the Self. The Sindhu is one of the chief rivers of Kashmīr, famous for its excellent water. She had been born in various forms, divine, human, bestial, as a worm, or what not, and each time had drunk the water of the Sindhu, playing many parts on the stage of human existence. She had been born over and over again as a human being, so to speak eating, i.e. experiencing, human flesh, and now at length she has recognized that it has been the one Self all the time, and that all these existences in ignorance had been profitless.

When by concentration of my thoughts I brought the pranava under my control,
I made my body like a blazing coal.

The six paths I traversed and gained the seventh,

And then did I, Lallā, reach the place of illumination.

The pranava is the mystic syllable ōm, and here may be taken as indicating any vital formula, such, for instance, as tat tvam asi (see verse 60). She brought this under control, i.e. she mastered it, and thus became imbued with the truth. She then became able to suppress her vital airs (see Note on Yōga, § 21 and Vocabulary s. vv. nāḍi and prān, 2), and thereby entered into a state of grace. By this suppression her frame became suffused with a holy fire.

The six ways are the six cakras, or seats of the six subordinate Śaktis that urge a man to action. They are supposed to be located along what corresponds to the spinal cord of a man's subtile body. The devotee has to master these one by one, and then attains to the seventh and highest station, or sahasrāra cakra, by meditating on which he obtains final release. The whole process is explained in greater detail in the Note on Yōga, §§ 9-21, and Vocabulary, s. vv. shēh and sōm.

The word sath-mārg may mean either the seventh path or the true path, in either case indicating the sahasrāra cakra.

A wise man saw I a-dying of hunger,
 As the leaves fall with even a gentle wind in the wintry month of Pauṣa.

And saw I also a fool beating his cook.

Since then have I, Lallā, been waiting for the day when love for the world will be cut from me.

She has seen the injustice of this world, and longs for freedom from the desire for existence. A man's wisdom will not save him from starvation, or from liability to death from even the slightest cause; and a fool may be rich and prosperous, whose only sorrow is that his cook now and then does not sufficiently spice his food, and who securely acts as a tyrant to him in consequence.

84. What is this that hath happened? What kind hath bechanced me?

* * * * *

In all these verses but one tale hath fallen to my lot.

I, Lallā, have happened on a lake, and know not on what sand-bank I shall run aground.

85. What is this that hath happened? What kind hath bechanced me?

I made all things out of order, on what sand-bank shall I run aground?

* * * * *

It turned out well for me, for I myself will learn to know (my Self).

These are two of Lallā's hard sayings which are unintelligible at the present day, although there is no dispute as to the text.

84. The meaning of the word huda-hudañēy in the second line of this verse is unknown to modern Kāshmīrīs, and without knowing their meaning, there is no clue to the sense of the rest of the line. The remaining words of the line in the modern language might mean, 'my claw has been cut (?) by a blow', but whether they bore this meaning in Lallā's time is doubtful.

The latter half of the verse is fairly plain. The one complaint of all her verses is the miserable uncertainty of human existence in this world, till a man has known the Supreme.

85. In this verse it is the third line that is devoid of meaning to Kāshmīrīs of the present day. The actual words might mean 'for plastering my ceiling I got a clumsy carpenter', but it is not likely that this is what Lallā originally intended, or wrote. The word abakh is not used nowadays, and there is no tradition as to its meaning, but there is a word abakhwārēñ which means 'clumsy'.

Once wast thou a swan, and now thou hast become mute.

Some one, I know not who, hath run off with something of thine.

As soon as the mill became stopped, the grain channel became choked,

And away ran the miller with the grain.

This is another of Lallā's hard sayings, the true interpretation of which is unknown. The swan is fabled to have a very melodious voice, and (Lallā is addressing herself) she whose voice was once like that of a swan has now become dumb.

When a mill-stone stops revolving, the orifice in the upper stone, through which the grain is fed on its way to being ground, becomes blocked up and hidden under a pile of grain. The meaning of the metaphor, and who is represented by the miller, is uncertain. The verse has a curious echo of Ecclesiastes xii. 3-4. Perhaps Lallā means that she has now found salvation, and is in a state of silent rapture. Formerly she had preached volubly (cf. verse 89); but now that she sees God she is silent. God is the miller, who turns the mill of worldly experience in order to grind out the grain of the chastened soul. Now He has finished His work. The mill is still, the channel blocked by the husks, and the Miller has taken to Himself the grain. But it must be understood that this is entirely our own attempted interpretation, and has no Kāshmirī authority.

87. Even while in thy mother's womb thou madest a vow.

When, Sir, will that vow come to thy remembrance ?

Die, Sir, even before thy death,

Then, when thy death cometh, great honour will increase for thee.

88. Let not the ass loose to stray from thy guiding hand,

Or, of a surety, will it devour thy neighbour's saffron-garden.

Who then will there be there to offer his back to thee to mount,

Where the sword will fall upon thy naked form ?

87. It is believed that while a child is in its mother's womb it remembers all its former births, and resolves in its coming life to act so as to acquire release from further transmigration. But directly it is born, recollection of these previous existences disappears and it loses all memory of its resolution. The same idea is developed in verse 51.

Here Lallā reproaches an unbeliever with this act of forgetfulness. She advises him, while yet alive, to become as one dead (cf. verse 12), by destroying the six enemies—lust, wrath, desire, arrogance, delusion, and jealousy (see Vocabulary s. v. lūb)—and thus acquiring complete indifference to worldly temptations. The resultant honour is, of course, absorption into the Supreme Self—contrasted with the objects of the worldly ambition practised by her auditor.

The commentator here quotes the following apposite lines from the Bhagavad Gītā (v. 23) :—

śaknōtīhāva yaḥ sōdhuṁ prāk śarīra-vimōkṣaṇāt |
kāma-kṛōdhōdbhavaṁ vēgaṁ sa yuktaḥ sa sukhī naraḥ ||

He who has strength to bear here ere release from the body the passion born of love and wrath, is of the Rule, he is a happy man. (Barnett's Translation.)

88. The ass is the mind. Keep it under control, or it will wander forth into strange heresies, and will suffer in consequence.

The saffron-gardens are the most valuable cultivated land in Kāshmīr. An ass loose in one might do incalculable damage, and would suffer accordingly. Apparently, in Lallā's metaphor, the ass's owner, in such a case, would be liable to the extreme penalty of the law.

In the second half of the verse, if the mind is not controlled, and does not recognize the nature of Self, it can give no help when its owner is at the point of death, under the sword of Yama.

The commentator quotes as apposite the following lines from the Bhagavad Gītā (ii. 60-63) :—

yatatō hy api Kauntēya puruṣasya vipaścitaḥ |
indriyāṇi pramāthīni haranti prasabhaṁ manah |
tāni sarvāṇi saṁyamya yukta āsīta mat-parah |

kṛōdhāt bhavati saṁmōhaḥ saṁmōhāt smṛti-vibhramaḥ |
smṛti-bhraṁsād buddhi-nāśō buddhi-nāśāt prapaśyati ||

For though the prudent man strive, O son of Kuntī, his froward instruments of sense carry away his mind perforce.

Let him hold all these in constraint and sit under the Rule, given over to Me; for he who has his sense-instruments under his sway has wisdom abidingly set.

In the man whose thoughts dwell on the ranges of sense arises attachment to them; from attachment is born love; from love springs wrath.

From wrath is confusion born; from confusion wandering of memory; from breaking of memory wreck of understanding; from wreck of understanding a man is lost. (Barnett's Translation.)

[In these verses a number of words have double meanings, so that the whole has two different interpretations. Compare verse 101. The first interpretation is:—]

89. Helpless and wretched made I my cry in the market,

‘Here for you be lotus-stalks. Will ye not buy?’

Then again I returned, and, behold, how well I cried,

‘Onions and garlic will ye not buy?’

90. I came to know that onion and garlic are the same.

If a man fry onion he will have no tasty dish.

If a man fry onion, let him not eat a scrap thereof.

Therefore found I the flavour of ‘I am He’.

89. Lotus-stalks stewed with meat are freely eaten in Kashmīr, and are sold in the markets.

90. Onions fried by themselves make only an evil-smelling mess, of no use as food. The above is the exoteric interpretation of the two verses. The sense is not very great, and, unless there is some double meaning in the words sō-'ham, which we have not discovered, the double entente breaks down in the last line of the second verse.

[The second, esoteric interpretation is:—]

89. Helpless and wretched made I my cry in the world,

‘Here be a thing of no worth. Will ye not therefore take it?’

Then again returning (to my senses), behold, how well I cried,

‘The breathing body and the soul will ye not take (under your control)?’

90. I came to know that the breathing body and the soul are one.

That if a man cherish his body, the flavour (of true bliss) he will not gain.

That if he cherish his body, therefrom will he reap no true joy.

And so I gained for myself the flavour of ‘I am He’.

89. In her early days, before she had reached a knowledge of her Self, she had been offering worthless teaching to the people, and had urged them to accept it. Then, again, when she had learnt the truth, she came and urged them to practise yōga by controlling their vital breaths (see Vocabulary, s. vv. nāḍi and prāṇ, 2) and by mastering a knowledge of the nature of the soul. The word prāṇ, vital breath, is here used to indicate the body, which exists by breathing.

90. Cherishing the body and devoting oneself to worldly enjoyments give no profit. The word ‘to eat’ also means ‘to eat the good things of this life’, ‘to enjoy oneself’, and this gives the double meaning to the third line. Cherishing the body may give apparent temporary pleasure, but even this is mixed with pain, and in the end there is no profit—only ceaseless soul-wandering. Lallā grasps the fact, and thereby discovers the rapture of the great truth contained in the formula ‘I am He’, or tat tvam asi, ‘thou art It’, for which see verse 60.

91. O Honoured Saint! O Saint! Heedfully lend thou ear unto my words.

Dost thou remember the days of yore?

O Children! How will ye pass the days and nights?

Harder and harder becometh the age, and what will ye do?

92. In the coming days so malformed will be natures,

That pears and apples will ripen with the apricots.

Hand in hand, from the house will go forth mother and daughter,

And with strange men will they consort day after day.

91. A wail over the evil times in store. Even holy men have no memory of past times and of past existences, to profit by it. So then what chance have the children,—the coming generation,—in this evil Kali age?

92. Times will become more and more evil, and there is none to warn or to guide to the true knowledge.

Human nature itself will change for the worse, as if pears and apples, whose ripening time is the late autumn, were to change and ripen with the apricots in the height of the rainy season. All women will be unchaste. Mother and daughter, hand in hand,—i. e. pimping for each other,—will go abroad in search of strange men.

The main idea of this verse has survived in a familiar Kāshmīrī proverb,—tēli, hā māli, āsan kiṃamatakⁱ kēran, yēli tūṭhⁱ papan tēran-sūlⁱ. When apples ripen at the same time as apricots, then, O father, will come the day of resurrection, i. e. it will come on a day and at an hour when men look not for it. Cf. K. Pr. 214.

The soul is ever new and new ; the moon is ever new and new.

So saw I the waste of waters ever new and new.

But since I, Lallā, scoured my body and my mind,

I, Lallā, am ever new and new.

The human soul, subject to illusion and worldly desires, is ever changing in its outward appearance, from birth to birth, although it is always the same ; just as the moon is always the same moon, though perpetually waxing and waning.

The universe itself, though the same throughout, at stated intervals undergoes dissolution into a waste of waters, and is afterwards re-formed again ; and Lallā herself remembers seeing this in former births (cf. verses 50 and 96).

Then at length Lallā scours illusion from her mind, and she becomes a new creature, for now she knows her Self.

*gōran won^unam kunuy watun

My teacher spake to me but one precept.

He said unto me, 'from without enter thou the inmost part'.

That to me became a rule and a precept,
 And therefore naked began I to dance.

The Guru, or spiritual preceptor, confides to his disciple the mysteries of religion. Lallā's account is that he taught her to recognize the external world as naught but an illusion, and to restrict her thoughts to meditation on her inner Self. When she had grasped the identity of her Self with the Supreme Self, she learnt to appreciate all externals at their true value. So she abandoned even her dress, and took to going about naked.

With this may be compared the concluding lines of verse 77, and the note to K. Pr. 20. The wandering of Lallā in a nude condition is the subject of more than one story in Kashmīr. Here she says that she danced in this state. Filled with the supreme rapture, she behaved like a madwoman.

The dance, called tāṇḍava, of the naked devotee is supposed to be a copy of the dance of Śiva, typifying the course of the cosmos under the god's rule. It implies that the devotee has wholly surrendered the world, and become united with Śiva.

kyāh kara pōṇṣan dahan ta kāhan wōkh-shun yith lējē karith yim gaiy sōriy samahōn yith razi lamahōn ada kyāzi rāvihē kāhan gāv

What shall I do to the five, to the ten, to the eleven,

Who scraped out this pot and departed ?

Had they all united and pulled upon this rope,

Then how should the cow of the eleven owners have been lost ?

The 'five' are the five bhūtas, or principles of experience of the material world (see verse 77 and Vocabulary, s. v. būth, 2). The 'ten' are the ten principal and secondary vital airs (see Vocabulary, s. v. prān, 2). The 'eleven' are the five organs (indriya) of sense (jñānēndriya), and the five organs of action (karmēndriya) (see Vocabulary s. v. yund^u), together with the thinking faculty or manas (see Vocabulary, s. v. man) which rules them, as the eleventh.

If all these could be controlled, and were all united in the one endeavour to compass Self-realization, there would have been a chance of success; but they all pull in different directions, one misdirecting the soul hither, and another thither, to the soul's ruin. It is like a cow owned by eleven masters, each of whom holds it by a separate rope, and each of whom pulls it in a different direction. The result is the loss, i. e. the destruction, of the cow.

The 'pot' which they have scraped out is the soul. Just as people take a pot of food, and ladle out its contents, scraping out the last dregs; so these have taken the last dregs of worldly enjoyment out of the soul for their own purposes, and have then gone away and left it helpless. They themselves have gained only temporary joys, while the soul has lost its opportunity of union with the Supreme.

For a moment saw I a bush all flowers.

For a moment saw I nor rose nor thorn.

97. For a moment saw I a cooking-hearth ablaze.

For a moment saw I nor fire nor smoke.

For a moment saw I the mother of the Pāṇḍavas.

For a moment saw I an aunt of a potter's wife.

These two verses form one of Lallā's best known sayings. Another version will be found in K. Pr. 47. The subject is the impermanence of everything material.

‘But pleasures are like poppies spread,
 You seize the flower, its bloom is shed;
 Or, like the snow-fall in the river,
 A moment white, then melts for ever.’

96. The river is a stream confined within bounds. The next thing seen is the infinite waste of waters at a general dissolution of the universe. Cf. verses 50 and 93.

97. The Pāṇḍavas, the famous heroes of the Mahābhārata, were kings, and their mother, Kuntī, was a queen. Yet, through treachery, they were all at one time reduced to the direst misery, and wandered hungry and thirsty till they came to the city of King Drupada. Here, with their mother, the Pāṇḍavas, disguised as mendicant Brāhmaṇas, found refuge in the hut of a potter, and supported themselves by begging. Lallā adds that the potter's wife, or her children, called Kuntī their aunt. This is contrary to the Mahābhārata story, for it would make out that the Pāṇḍavas and their mother posed as potters, not as Brāhmaṇas. It is a curious fact that the stories of the great Indian epics, as told in Kāshmīr, sometimes differ widely from the Sanskrit texts current in India proper. For instance, in a Kāshmīrī Rāmāyaṇa, Sītā is represented as the daughter of Mandōdarī, the wife of Rāvaṇa.

āyēs watē gayēs na watē suman-sōthi-manz lūstum dōh* candas wuchum ta hār na athē† nāwa-tāras dima kyāh bōh

* V. l. swa-mana-sōthi-manz

† V. l. Har-nāv na athē. Also atē

By a way I came, but I went not by the way.

While I was yet on the midst of the embankment with its crazy bridges, the day failed for me.

I looked within my poke, and not a cowry came to hand (or, atē, was there).

What shall I give for the ferry-fee?

Or, if we adopt the alternative readings, we must translate :—

By a way I came, but I went not by the way.

While I was yet on the midst of the embankment of my own mind, the day failed for me.

I looked within my poke, and found not Hara's name.

What shall I give for a ferry-fee?

Another of Lallā's most popular sayings, current in many forms besides the two quoted above. Another version will be found in K. Pr. 18. Both the readings given above are probably correct, and the verse has thus a double meaning.

By 'way' is meant a highway, as distinct from an uncertain track. This highway is birth as a human being capable of gaining salvation, and it was Lallā's good fortune to come into the world by it. But she did not avail herself of the opportunity; and so, when she died, she left the highway of salvation, and was compelled to be born and reborn.

If, in the third line, we take the reading 'hār', or 'cowry', the allusion is to the belief that when a person dies his soul has to cross the river Vaitaraṇī, and passes through many dangers in the course of its traverse. If a small piece of money is placed in his mouth at the time of death, he can use it to pay for a ferry-boat to bring him across. For further particulars see the note to K. Pr. 18. A sum is a crazy bridge of one or two planks or sticks thrown across a gap in an embankment.

If, however, we take the other reading 'Hār', i.e. Hara or Śiva, instead of hār, we get Lallā's esoteric meaning. It is not the literal cowry that she missed, but the name of Śiva, which she found not in the pocket of her mind. The pronunciation of suman (plural dative of sum) is, in Kāshmirī, practically the same as that of swa-man or sōman, one's own mind; so that, as read out or recited without regard to spelling, the verse has a double meaning. When she died, she found that in her lifetime she had not stored up a knowledge of the Supreme Śiva, i.e. of the Supreme Self, in her intellect; and therefore on her deathbed found no saving grace, or, as she expresses it, she found herself in the dark on some crazy bridge over a fathomless abyss, and had nothing available to pay for the boat of salvation to ferry her across.

The moral is that, inasmuch as birth in a human body is the only chance that a soul has of being saved, when it is fortunate enough to obtain such a birth it should spend its lifetime in gaining a knowledge of the Supreme Self.

Now is it dawn. Seek thou for the Friend.

100. Give thou breath to the bellows,

Even as doth the blacksmith.

Then will thine iron turn to gold.

Now is it dawn. Seek thou for the Friend.

Two more very popular verses of Lallā's. Another version will be found in K. Pr. 46. Lallā is addressing herself.

99. She has begun to receive instruction, and urges herself to go forward. The desire of knowledge has come to her, and she must seek for the Friend—the Supreme Self.

100. Just as a blacksmith controls the pipe of his bellows, and with the air thus controlled, turns his rough iron into what he desires; so must she control the vital airs circulating through her pipes or nāḍis, and thus convert the crude iron of her soul into the gold of the Supreme Self. See Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21, and Vocabulary, s. vv. nāḍi and prān, 2.

As for the meaning of dam dyun^u see the next verse.

prāna-ṭūr roṭum ta dyut^umas dam hrēdayēcē kūṭh^arē-andar gonḍum

[This verse is capable of a double interpretation, depending on the two meanings of the word prān, as 'onion', and as 'vital air'. Cf. verses 89, 90. The first interpretation is:—]

I locked the doors and windows of my body.

I seized the thief of my onions, and called for help.

I bound him tightly in the closet of my heart,
And with the whip of the pranava did I flay him.

[The second, esoteric, interpretation is as follows:—]

I locked the doors and windows of my body.

I seized the thief of my vital airs, and controlled my breath.

I bound him tightly in the closet of my heart,
And with the whip of the pranava did I flay him.

It is necessary to explain that the expression dam dyun^u, to give breath, is used in three senses. It may mean 'to give breath' (e.g. to a bellows), as in the preceding verse. Or it may mean 'to give forth breath', i.e. 'to cry out'. Or it may mean—also as in the preceding verse—'to control the breath' by the yōga exercise called prāṇāyāma (see Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 23, and Vocabulary, s.v. nāḍi). The thief of the vital airs is the worldly temptations that interfere with their proper control.

The pranava is the mystic syllable ōm, regarding which see verses 15, 33, and 34.

102. I, Lallā, went forth in the hope of (blooming like) a cotton-flower.

Many a kick did the cleaner and the carder give me.

Gossamer made from me did the spinning woman lift from the wheel,

And a hanging kick did I receive in the weaver's work-room.

103. When the washerman dashed me (or turned me over) on the washing-stone,

He rubbed me much with fuller's earth and soap.

When the tailor worked his scissors on me, piece by piece,

Then did I, Lallā, obtain the way of the Supreme.

These two verses form another of Lallā's hard sayings which Kāshmīrīs of the present day do not profess to be able to explain. The general meaning is clear enough. Lallā describes her progress to true knowledge through the metaphor of a cotton-pod. The cotton is first roughly treated by the cleaner and the carder. It is next spun into fine thread, and then hung up in misery as the warp on a weaver's loom. The finished cloth is then dashed by the washerman on his stone, and otherwise severely treated in order to whiten it; and, finally, the tailor cuts it up and makes out of it a finished garment. The various stages towards the attainment of knowledge are thus metaphorically indicated, but the explanation of each separate metaphor is unknown. Very possibly, each stage in the manufacture of the cloth represents, not a stage in a single life, but a separate existence in Lalla's progress from birth to birth.

The word lath, occurring twice in verse 102, means 'a kick', and is used in the sense of general violent treatment—once under the cotton-carder's bow, and again when the threads are hung up and strained tight in the loom. The word tay has two meanings. In the first place, it indicates a woman whose profession it is to spin a particular kind of gossamer thread; and in the second place, it indicates the particular thread itself. The being drawn out to this extreme fineness is one of the hardships to which the cotton is subjected.

The procedure of an Indian washerman is well known. He has, half submerged on the bank of a pond or river, a large flat stone. On this he dashes with great force the garment to be washed, which has been previously soaked in soap and water. It is a most effective method of driving out all dirt, and also, incidentally, of ruining the texture of the cloth.

I hoped not in it for a moment, I trusted it not by a hair.

Still I, Lallā, drank the wine of mine own sayings.

Yet, then did I seize an inner darkness and bring it down,

And tear it, and cut it to pieces.

Another hard saying, the full meaning of which is doubtful. Apparently it means that when Lallā first began to utter her sayings, as she calls her verses and as they are still called (Lallā-vākyāni), though they intoxicated her like wine, she had no conception that they would have any permanent effect upon her. Yet she found that by their help she became enabled to dissipate the inner darkness of her soul. Or perhaps 'it' is the vanities of the world. Feeling distrustful and fearful of the dark mysterious world of phenomena, she drank the wine of her verses to give herself courage to fight against it, and thus was emboldened to knock down its phantasmagoria.

 I call,

And soothe his pain with the Love of God.

Crying 'It is I, Lallā—it is I, Lallā', the the defilement of the ten.

The end of moonlight is the early dawn,—hence the conclusion of the night of ignorance referred to in the preceding verse. The mad one is the mind intoxicated and maddened by worldly illusion. The Beloved whom Lallā awoke was her own Self, which she roused to the knowledge of its identity with the Supreme Self. The ten are the five organs of sense and the five organs of action—the chief impediments to the acceptance of the Great Truth. See Vocabulary, s. v. yund^u. Dah, ten, also means 'a lake'. Thus, by a paronomasia, the last line may also be translated, 'I became one with him, and my mind lost its defilement, as in a lake (of crystal-clear water).'

With such a line, O Burden-bearer ! the ship will not progress for thee.

That which Nārāyaṇa wrote for thee in the line of fate,

That, Good Sir ! none can reverse for thee.

The rope of sand is the belief in formal religion and the desire for worldly joys. The accomplishment of such desires is beyond the reach of any man. He can only attain to that which is written by Nārāyaṇa, i.e. God, as his fate. No effort of his will can alter that.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that the only method of escaping fate is to effect the union of the Self with the Supreme.

There are various interpretations of some of the words in this verse. Ami rakhi, by means of this (weak) line, i.e. the rope of sand, may also be translated 'on this (thin) line', i.e. along the narrow track, or towing-path, on the bank of a river. Another reading is ami raṭi, by grasping it, sc. the rope of sand. The word hamāli, O Burden-bearer, may also be read as ha māli, O Father, here a polite form of address, equivalent to 'Good Sir'. A 'burden-bearer' is a labouring man accustomed to lifting heavy weights, and, as such, would be employed on the heavy work of pulling a tow-rope. This method of taking a ship up-stream is a common sight on Kashmīr rivers.

Crooked for me hath become my day's work. How can I succeed?

The words of my teacher have fallen upon me like a blister of loss.

My flock hath lost its shepherd. How can I succeed?

Another of Lallā's hard sayings. Its meaning is apparently as follows:—

Like Christian in The Pilgrim's Progress, she has been bearing on her back a burden of worldly illusions and pleasures, compared to a load of sugar-candy, and the knot of the porter's sling that supports it has become loose and galls her. In other words, she has found that such a burden produces only toil and pain. Her wasted life in this workaday world has become a weariness, and she is in despair.

She has recourse to her Guru, or spiritual teacher. His words cause her intolerable pain—a pain such as that experienced by the loss of some loved object (the worldly illusion which she must abandon), and she learns that the whole flock of factors that make up her sentient existence have lost their proper ruler, the mind; for it is steeped in ignorance of Self.

Searching and seeking came I from my inner soul into the moonlight.

Searching and seeking came I to know that like are joined to like.

This All is only Thou, O Nārāyaṇa, only Thou. Only Thou. What are all these Thy sports?

For the comparison of the moonlight to true knowledge, see the Vocabulary, s. v. sōm.

‘Like joined to like’: i. e. the Self is the same as the Supreme Self, and must become absorbed in it.

↳ Nārāyaṇa is generally the name for the Supreme employed by Vaiṣṇavas. Here it is employed by the Śaiva Lallā. The expression ‘sport’ is a well-known technical term for the changes apparently undergone by the Deity, by which He manifests Himself in creation.

Lallā asks, What are these manifestations? The answer, of course, being that they are all unreal illusion.

VERSES BY LALLĀ IN KNOWLES'S DICTIONARY OF KASHMIRI PROVERBS

MR. HINTON KNOWLES'S valuable Dictionary of Kashmiri Proverbs and Sayings (Bombay, 1885) contains a number of verses attributed to Lallā. With Mr. Knowles's kind permission, I have excerpted them and give them in the following appendix. The spelling of the Kāshmīrī quotations has necessarily been changed to agree with the system of transliteration adopted for the preceding pages, and here and there I have had occasion to modify the translations. But, save for a few verbal alterations, Mr. Knowles's valuable notes have been left untouched.

These verses are quoted by the abbreviation K. Pr. with the number of the page of the original work. [G. A. G.]

I came by a way (i. e. I was born) and I also went by a way (i. e. I died).

When I was on the embankment of (the illusions of) my own mind (i. e. when my spirit was between the two worlds), the day failed.

What shall I give for crossing the ferry ?

A saying of Lal Dēd, who was a very holy Hindū woman.

The Kāshmirī Hindū belief is that during the sixth month after death the spirit of the deceased has to cross the waters of the Vaitaraṇī; but it is impossible to get to the other side of the river except by special means, as the waters are so deep and stormy and the opposing powers, prēta, yamadūt, matsya, and kūrma are so strong. Accordingly about this time the bereaved relations call the family Brāhmaṇ, who repeats to them the portions appointed to be read on this occasion. Among other things the departed spirit is represented as standing on the brink of the river and crying 'Where is my father? Where is my mother? Where are my relations and my friends? Is there no one to help me over this river?' This is sometimes recited with much feeling, and great are the lamentations of the bereaved, who now with sobs and tears present a little boat and paddle, made of gold, or silver, or copper, according to their position, to the Brāhmaṇ; and in the boat they place ghī, milk, butter, and rice. The boat is for the conveyance of the spirit across Vaitaraṇī, and the provisions are for the appeasement of the contrary powers, prēta, matsya, and others, who will try to turn back the boat, but who on having these, ghī and rice, &c., thrown to them, will at once depart their own way.

The Hindūs believe that if this ceremony is performed in a right manner, a boat will be at once present upon the waters, close to that portion of the bank of the river, where the spirit is waiting and praying for it, and that the spirit getting into it will be safely conveyed to the opposite side. The gift-boat, however, is taken home by the Brāhmaṇ, and generally turned into money as soon as possible.

At the moment of death amongst other things a paīsā is placed within the mouth of the corpse, wherewith to pay the ferry.

This saying has its original in a story well known in Kashmīr. Lal Dēd, whose name has been mentioned before, used to peregrinate in an almost nude condition, and was constantly saying that 'He only was a man, who feared God, and there were very few such men about.'

One day, Shāh Hamadān, after whom the famous mosque in Śrīnagar is called, met her, and she at once ran away. This was a strange thing for Lal Dēd to do; but it was soon explained. 'I have seen a man', she said, to the astonished baniyā, into whose shop she had fled for refuge. The baniyā, however, turned her out. Then Lal Dēd rushed to the baker's house and jumped into the oven, which at that time was fully heated for baking the bread. When the baker saw this he fell down in a swoon, thinking that, for certain, the king would hear of this and punish him. However, there was no need to fear, as Lal Dēd presently appeared from the mouth of the oven clad in clothes of gold, and hastened after Shāh Hamadān. Cf. Panjab Notes and Queries, ii. 743.

famous female disciple, Lal Dēd, when the following questions cropped up :—

‘Which was the greatest of all lights?’ ‘Which was the most famous of all pilgrimages?’ ‘Which was the best of all relations ?' 'Which was the best of all manner of ease ?' Lal was the first to reply :—

'There is no light like that of the sun ;
There is no pilgrimage like Gangā ;
There is no relation like a brother ;
There is no ease like that of a wife.'

But Sēd did not quite agree. 'No', said he—

'There is no light like that of the eyes ;
There is no pilgrimage like that of the knees ;
There is no relation like one's pocket ;
There is no ease like that of a blanket.'

Then Lal Dēd, determining not to be outwitted by her master, again replied :—

'There is no light like that of the knowledge of God ;

There is no pilgrimage like that of an ardent love ;

There is no relation to be compared with the Deity ;

There is no ease like that got from the fear of God.'

I have seen something like a part of the above lines in the Rev. C. Swynnerton's Adventures of Rājā Rasālū, but not having the book at hand I cannot say in what connexion they occur there.¹

Gangā or Gangābal is one of the great Hindū places of pilgrimage. Hither go all those Paṇḍits, who have had relations die during the year, carrying some small bones, which they had picked from the ashes at the time of the burning of the dead bodies. These bones are thrown into the sacred waters of Gangābal with money and sweetmeats. The pilgrimage takes place about the 8th day of the Hindū month Bādarṣṭ (August 20th cir.). Cf. Vigne's Travels in Kashmīr, &c., vol. ii, pp. 151, 152.

APPENDIX II

ON LALLĀ'S LANGUAGE

[By SIR GEORGE GRIERSON.]

LALLĀ lived in the fourteenth century. These songs have been handed down by word of mouth, and it has been pointed out in the Introduction how in the course of centuries, as the colloquial language changed, the language in which they were originally composed insensibly changed too.¹ We cannot therefore be surprised at finding that the verses as here published are, on the whole, in the Kāshmīrī spoken at the present day. A certain number of archaic forms have, however, survived; some, on account of their very strangeness, which marked them as old-fashioned, and others, because the language of poetry, with its unvarying laws of metre, always changes more slowly than does that of colloquial speech. In this latter respect the compositions of Lallā are not alone in Kashmīr, and all the poetry of her country, even that written in the last century, contains many archaic forms. We therefore find scattered through these verses several examples of words and of idioms which throw light on the history of the Kāshmīrī language, and no apology is needed for drawing attention to the more important. It should be understood that these examples as quoted do not illustrate the general language of the songs, which is much more modern than would be gathered from the mere perusal of this Appendix. Throughout it is assumed that the reader has an elementary acquaintance with modern Kāshmīrī.

Metrical requirements often demand a long syllable at the end of a line, and we frequently find in this position a long, where the modern language would employ a short, vowel. I have noted all these instances because a number of cases of apparent lengthening also occurs when the vowel is not final in a line, and is not required by the metre to be long. We are therefore not justified in assuming that such long vowels at the end of a line have been lengthened merely for the sake of metre.

Vocabulary.—There are a few words of which the meaning is doubtful, and two or three of which the meaning is altogether unknown at the present day. Such are *līlām*ⁱ (81) and (all in 84-5) huda-hudañēy, rāza-dāñē, and abakh. The first is said to mean 'sports' (cf. Skr. līlā), but I have found no tradition as to the meaning of the others. I may note here that in other Kāshmirī literature which, like Lallā's songs, is preserved by memory and not in writing, such words are not uncommon, and that the reciters, and, when consulted, even Paṇḍits, are never ashamed to confess ignorance of their meaning. As to the genuineness of these unknown words, and as to the general correctness of texts so preserved, the reader is referred to the remarks on pp. 3 ff. of the Introduction.

In this connexion we may note a termination -wōn^u, forming nouns of agency or possession, which I have not noted in the modern language. It occurs in the words shruta-wōn^u, a hearer; brama-wōn^u, a wanderer; pruthi-wōn^u, of, or belonging to, the earth; and shūba-wōn^u, beautiful. It runs parallel with the modern termination -wōl^u (= Hindī -wūlā), but I am inclined to look upon it rather as directly derived from the Sanskrit termination -vān, perhaps influenced as to its form by the analogy of -wōl^u. Cf. Skr. śruta-vān, bhrama-vān, prthivī-mān, and śōbhā-vān.

Occasionally we find tatsama forms employed where the modern language employs semi-tatsamas. Thus, we have snān (mod. shrān), bathing; sūrya (mod. sirē), the sun; sarwa (mod. sōr^u), all. We may note that, for this last word, the Hindī form sab also occurs. So, we have pyuwum (for piwum), compared with Hindī piyā, but Modern Kāshmirī cyōm, I drank; dyūkhukh (for dēkhukh), compared with H. dēkhā, but Mod. K. dyūṭhukh (for ḍēṭhukh), saw thee; kiyēm, compared with H. kiyā, but Mod. K. karēm, I made (f. pl. object).

The ordinary word for the numeral 'one' is akh or okh, but Lallā also has yēkh, which may be compared with the Hindī ēk.

Other miscellaneous instances of unusual vocabulary are vyukh (Mod. viḥ), appearance; yundh, an organ (indriya); kouh, some one, any one (in pl. ag. kandēv); kyōh or kyāwu (Mod. kyāh), or, as well as; kō-zana or kō-zanañi, by what means?; pushērun (Mod. pushērun), to make over; nā, nō (Mod. na), not; and man or mō (Mod. ma), prohibitive particle.

Phonetics.—Vowels.—As in Modern Kāshmīrī, a following c, ch, or sh becomes ē, though as often as not written a. No examples have been found of the written change after c, but for ch we have lachē, for lacha, the oblique form singular of lach, a hundred thousand, and there are numerous examples of the change after sh, of which shēnkar, for shankar, Śaṅkara, will suffice. It is, of course, a commonplace of Kāshmīrī that i and ē are interchangeable, and that the ordinary speaker is unable to distinguish between the two sounds. It thus follows that after ch, a, ē, and i are all written interchangeably for the same sound—ē. Thus, bōchi-sūty, (dying) of hunger, is indifferently written with bōcha, bōchē, or bōchi. In verse 83, we have bōcha, although the sound of bōchi is certainly intended.

Similarly in the modern language interchange of ē and i is equally universal. Lallā goes further, in that she has both gēh and giḥ, a house; and dēh and diḥ, the body. We may judge from this that she pronounced gēh as gēh, and dēh as dēh.

In the modern language ai (which is interchangeable with ō) generally becomes ū when followed by u-mātrā, and becomes ü when followed by i-mātrā or ü-mātrā. Thus, the base yait-, or yōt-, as much (as), has its nominative singular masculine yūt, its nominative plural masculine yūtī, and its nominative singular feminine yūtū. Similarly, there is a modern Kāshmīrī word pūr^u, a foot, for which Lallā gives the plural ablative as pairiv, showing that the base of the word is pair-. No instance occurs of the form which she would give to the nominative singular of this word, but she would probably have used pairu, for, in the place of the modern Kāshmīrī yūl^u, she uses yaitu, and, in the place of modern kūlⁱ (nom. pl. masc.), how many?, she has kaitⁱ. In other words, in Lallā's time, ai preserved its sound before u-mātrā and i-mātrā, and probably also before ū-mātrā, and the epenthetic change to ū and ī seems to have come into the language since her days. This is borne out by the very fluctuating methods employed in indicating these changes in writing at the present time.

Consonants.—As in the modern language, there are no sonant aspirates. They are occasionally written in tatsamas, but even here there is no consistency, and when a sonant aspirate is written we may be sure that the fact is of no importance. On the other hand, we must not reject the possibility that the customary omission of the aspiration of sonant aspirates is not original, but has been introduced during the process of handing down the text by word of mouth. In other words, we can judge nothing from the presence or the omission of the aspiration.

We are, however, on surer ground when we approach the second great law of Kāshmīrī pronunciation—that a final surd is always aspirated. These are regularly aspirated throughout the whole text, and this is original, and is not due to modern pronunciation. Thus in verse 5, rāth, night, rhymes with nāth, a lord. Now, the th of nāth is original, and owes nothing to the special Kāshmīrī rule, but the original form of rāth is rāt, and the t has been aspirated under the special rule. The fact that rāt would not rhyme with nāth shows that Lallā pronounced the word as rāth, and that consequently she did aspirate her final surds.

Modern Kāshmīrī has a very weak feeling of the difference between cerebrals and often interchanges them, and also commonly, in village dialect, interchanges a cerebral t or ṭ with a dental r. So, Lallā has ḍōḍⁱ, for modern ḍōḍⁱ, thoroughly, continually (compare Sanskrit dārḍhya-); dēshun or dēshun, to see (dṛśyati*); cēḍun or cērun, to mount; gaṭun or garun, to form; hyuḍ^u (mod. hyur^u), the gullet; mūḍun or mūrun, to triturate; paḍun or parun to recite; zūḍ^u or zūr^u, bad habits.

Here also we may draw attention to the well-known fact that Kāshmirī has no cerebral n. A dental n is always substituted for it. Thus, Skr. kāṇa-, one-eyed, is represented by Ksh. kōn^u. This n, representing an original n, Lallā has changed to a dental r in the form kōr^u. Finally, in this connexion, we have a modern dental l represented by Lallā's dental r in her chōr, for chūl, a waterfall.

The modern language shows a tendency to insert a w before a long ā in the first syllable of a word. So, Lallā has gwāh (modern gāh), illumination; gārun or gwārun, to search; and sās or swās, ashes.

We have interchange of d and z in wuḍun or wuzun, to awake from sleep.¹

Declension.—Substantives and Adjectives.—Kāshmirī has four declensions, viz. (1) a masculine a-declension; (2) a masculine i-declension; (3) a feminine i-declension; and (4) a feminine a-declension. This is the general explanation of the forms involved, and is a good representation of the present state of affairs, but from the point of view of origin it is not quite accurate. The true grouping would be to class the second and third declensions as ka-suffix-declensions, and the first and fourth as non-ka-suffix declensions. All nouns in the first and second declensions are masculine, and all those in the third and fourth are feminine. Some of the nouns of the fourth declension have really i-bases, and what distinguishes them from nouns of the third declension is not that they follow an a-declension—which they do not—but that they had no original ka-suffix.

For the sake of simplicity, I take the non-ka-suffix nouns first, and begin with the first, or masculine, declension. This is quite correctly described as an a-declension. Even the few surviving i- and u-bases follow it. Thus, the word gōsū, a grass-seller, follows this declension, although it must be referred to a Sanskrit i-base ghāsin*-. The typical declension in the modern language is as follows:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	śūr , a thief.	śūr .
Dat.	śūras .	śūran .
Instr. and Ag.	(śūrⁱ), śūran .	śūrav .
Abl.	(śūrⁱ), śūra .	śūrav .

It will be observed that, as in Prakrit, the dative is represented by the old genitive (cōrasya, cōrassa; cōrāṇām, cōrāṇa). The forms in brackets given for the instr. and abl. singular are nowadays described as 'old forms' and occur only in special words and idioms. The i-termination is to be referred to the Prakrit -hi. The instrumental and agent case is everywhere only a special form of the case which I call the ablative. The latter is used in many senses, and its use closely corresponds to that of the Latin ablative. Like that, it is frequently governed by a postposition corresponding to the Latin preposition. In such circumstances it corresponds to the general oblique case of Hindī nouns, and may, itself, also be called the 'oblique case', as is occasionally done in these pages.

In the old Apabhramśa dialect current in Kashmīr before the birth of Kāshmīrī the nominative and accusative singular of a-bases, masculine and neuter, ended in -u. Thus, in the first two verses of the ancient Kashmīr Apabhramśa work entitled the Mahārtha-prakāśa, we have paru for param; ghasmaru for ghasmarah; bhairu for bhairavah; and cakku for cakram. This termination survived into Lallā's time, for she has paramu for paramah in v. 77.

We have interesting survivals of the oldest form of the modern dative singular. In v. 22, Lallā treats the word ātmā, self, as an a-base, and gives it a genitive ātmāsē (m. c. for ātmāsi), which I explain as a contraction of ātmassa*, with a survival of the original y of ālmasya*,—Kāshmīrī pronunciation ālmāsē*,—in the final i; or possibly she may have unconsciously endeavoured to reproduce a quasi-Sanskrit ātmāśya*. So, again, she has dēvas for Prakrit dēvassa, of a god, in 33, in which, according to the rule in all the Dardic languages, a vowel is not lengthened in compensation for the simplification of a consonantal group.

In the modern language the ablative generally ends in a short -a—a shortening of one of the Prakrit terminations -āō, ā, or of the Apabhraṃśa -aḥu. Lallā occasionally has ablatives ending in long ā, as in ōsā and sāsā in 18. Other examples are braṭā (1) and vimarshā (16), but these occur at the end of a line, and the vowel may have been lengthened for the sake of rhyme.

The instrumental-agent in i and the ablative in i may be considered together. They are used in various senses. A locative is very common. For the pure instrumental, we have abhyōsⁱ in verse 1. Locatives are gagānⁱ, in the sky (26); manⁱ, in the mind (18, 45); and āntⁱ (54) or āntihⁱ (33, 37, &c.), in the end. In the last example, the original hi-termination has survived. Lallā sometimes substitutes ē for the final i, as in athē, in the hand (10). In other cases the words occur at the end of a line, so that it is possible that the ē is here only i lengthened for the sake of metre. They are athē (98); garē, in the house (3, 34); māwāsē, on the day of the new moon (22). This termination i of the ablative occurs in all declinations, and we shall see that Lallā's change of the i to ē is very common.

In the modern language the instrumental-ablative plural ends in -av, also written -au. Perhaps -aṃ would be the best representation of the true sound. We are at once reminded of the Prakrit termination -āō, -āu, Apabhraṃśa -aḥū, of the ablative plural. In one place (53) Lallā has garu, which is to be translated as the locative plural of gara, a house. Its origin is evidently the same as that of the form with -av.

The other non-ka-declension is the fourth, and includes all the feminine nouns of this class. It has two divisions, viz. a-bases and i-bases. As an example of the modern declension of an a-base, we will take māl (Skr. mālū), a garland.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	māl.	māla.
Dat.	māli.	mālan.
Instr.-Abl.	māli.	mālav (mālay).

Which may be compared with the following Prakrit forms:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	mālā.	mālāō.
Gen.	mālāē, mālāi.	mālāṇa.
Abl.	mālāi, Ap. mālāhe.	mālāu, Ap. mālāhu.

It will be observed that Kāshmīrī has throughout lost the distinguishing termination -ā of the feminine. So also in Apabhramśa (Hc. iv, 330. Cf. Pischel, § 100).

Besides the above, Lallā has other forms. For the dative singular, she has dāiē (74), in the flood, and watē (98), on a road. Numerous other instances of datives or agents singular in -ē occur at the end of a line, such as hālē (4), from hāl, a bellows-pipe; Lalē (76), by Lallā; prahē (105), by love; tanē (76), to the body (Pr. tanūē); watē (98), on the road; yīśhē (45), with a wish (icchā); zūnē (9), to the moonlight (jyōtsnāyāḥ, jōḥhāē).

The second division, consisting of nouns with i-bases, is the so-called irregular fourth declension. In the nominative singular the termination -i of the bases is dropped, and the word is otherwise unchanged. But in the other cases, before the old vowel terminations, the -i- with the following vowel becomes ü-mātrā. This ü-mātrā, according to the usual Kāshmīrī phonetic rules, has certain epenthetic effects on the preceding vowel and consonant, for which see the usual grammars. The word hān (Skr. hāni-), loss, is therefore thus declined:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	hān.	hōñü.
Dat.	hōñü.	hōñün.
Instr.-Abl.	hōñü.	hōñüv.

The corresponding Prakrit declension would be :—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	hāṇā.	hāṇāḍ, Ap. hāṇiṇu.
Gen.	hāṇā.	hāṇāṇa.
Abl.	hāṇā.	hāṇiṇu, Ap. hāṇihū.

As modern Kāshmirī ū-mātrā represents an original ī, it is not surprising that Lallā should use the older form dōṇi, as the agent case of dān, a stream (39, 40), instead of the modern dōṇū.

Turning now to the ka-declensions, these are the second and the third. The second declension consists only of masculine nouns, and the third only of feminine.

In the case of an a-base, the original termination of the base, together with the ka-suffix, becomes -aka-, and in the case of an i-base it becomes -ika-. I have not yet noted any instance in Kāshmirī of the ka-suffix added to a u-base.

In the second declension, an a-base is thus declined in the modern language. The noun selected is wāḍur^u, a monkey :—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	wāḍur^u, wāḍur.	wāḍar.
Dat.	wāḍuras.	wāḍaran.
Abl.	wāḍara.	wāḍarav.

The corresponding Prakrit forms would be :—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	vāṇaraḍ.	vāṇaraḍ.
Gen.	vāṇaraassa.	vāṇaraḍṇa.
Abl.	vāṇaraḍ, vāṇaraḍ.	vāṇaraḍ.

It will be observed that, except in the nominative singular, the Kāshmirī declension has become exactly the same as in the first—non-ka—declension. The nominative singular is really wāḍar^u, but, as usual, the final u-mātrā epenthetically affects the preceding a, and the word becomes wāḍor^u or wāḍur^u. As u-mātrā is not itself sounded, this is commonly written wāḍur, and words of this group are treated by Kāshmirī grammarians as exceptional words of the first declension.

For a ka-noun with an i-base, we have as an example the word host^u, an elephant. The modern base of this word is hast-, but, in the nominative singular, the a has become o under the influence of the following u-mātrā. It is thus declined :—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	host^u .	hastⁱ .
Dat.	hastis .	hastēn (for hastyan).
Instr.-Ag.	hastⁱ .	} hastēv (for hastyan).
Abl.	hasti .

The word host^u represents an earlier hastikah, and this would be declined as follows in Prakrit :—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	hatthiō , Ap. hatthiu .	hatthiā .
Gen.	hatthiassa .	hatthiūṇa .
Abl.	hatthiāhi , Ap. hatthiahe .	hatthiūn , Ap. hatthiahū .

The Kāshmīrī word host^u is not a tatsama. In Kāshmīrī a Prakrit tth is not uncommonly represented by st. E. g. Skr. sārthakah, Pr. satthaō, Māgadhī Pr. śastaē, Ksh. sost^u, possessed of.

It is a noteworthy fact that while some Kāshmīrī a-bases with the ka-suffix are declined like wādur^u, the great majority have changed their base-forms, and are treated as if they were i-bases. For instance, the word gur^u, a horse (sg. dat. guris, abl. guri, and so on) follows host^u, an i-base, although the Sanskrit original is ghōṭakah, Pr. ghōṭaō, which is an a-base. This peculiarity certainly goes back as far as Lallā's time. She gives us hātⁱ (32) as the plural nominative of hot^u (hatakah), struck, and mōk^hhātⁱ (6), the plural nominative of mōk^hhot^u (muktakah), released, and so many others. In one case she hesitates between the two forms. She takes the word makor^u or makur^u, a mirror, and gives its dative singular as makuras (a-base) in 31, and as makuris (i-base) in 18.

I suggest that the origin of the treatment of a-bases as if they were i-bases is of a complex character. In the first place, when the intervocalic k of the ka-suffix is elided, a y may or may not be substituted for it. If no y is inserted, the word remains an a-base, and there is an end of the matter. But if a y is inserted, a word such as ghōṭakah becomes ghōṭayō, from which the transition to gurīu*, gur^u is easy. Then, again, the fact of the analogy of feminine ka-bases must be taken into account. Practically all these end in -ika-, and in Kāshmirī must be treated as i-bases. Finally, we know that in dialectic Prakrit -ika- was sometimes substituted for -aka- (Pischel, § 598). I believe that all these three causes contributed to the change of a-bases to i-bases in Kāshmirī.

We have seen that in modern Kāshmirī the sg. abl. of an i-base in this declension ends in -i, as in hastī. Lallā occasionally makes it end in -ē, and this is quite in accordance with the Prakrit form. Thus, from dūr^u, far, she has dūrē (36), for modern dūri; and from mōr^u, a hut, she has marē (K. Pr. 57), for mod. mari. The latter word occurs at the end of a line, and the termination may be due to metrical exigencies.

The pl. nom. ends in i, as in hastī. Lallā on three occasions lengthens this i, when at the end of a line, to ī or ē, viz. in handī, rams (77); nalī, cowry-shells (81); and samē, alike (16).

She makes the plural ablative end in -iv in pairiv, from pūr^u, a foot (38). This, however, is little more than a matter of spelling.

The third, or feminine ka-declension appears in the following form in the modern language. The word taken as an example is gur^ū a mare.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	gur^ū .	gurē (for gurya).
Dat.	gurē (for gurya).	gurēn (for guryan).
Instr.-Abl.	guri .	gurēv (for guryau).

The corresponding Prakrit forms would be:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	ghōḍiā .	ghōḍiā .
Gen.	ghōḍiāē , ghōḍiāi .	ghōḍiāṇa .
Abl.	ghōḍiāē , Ap. ghōḍiahe .	ghōḍiāu , Ap. ghōḍiahu .

As ē and i are interchangeable in Kāshmirī, the difference between the singular dative and ablative is only one of spelling, and as a matter of custom the two forms are often interchanged even by the most careful writers. The spelling given here is that of Īśvara-kaula.

It should be remembered that ü-mātrā in Kāshmīrī represents an original ĩ, so that the older form of gur^ü would be gurĩ. So Lallā has hishĩ for hish^ü, like, in 10 and 77; mōjĩ (97, end of line), for mōj^ü, a mother; pushōñĩ (39, 49, end of line), for pushōñ^ü, a florist; thajĩ (33, end of line), for thūj^ü, a shrine.

So, for the singular dative, we have wahawañĩ, for wahawañ^ü, flowing (57, end of line).

The Genitive Case.—Lallā's use of the genitive differs somewhat from that customary in modern Kāshmīrī. Nowadays there are three suffixes of the genitive, with sharply distinguished functions. These are -uk^u, -un^u, and -hond^u. The suffix -uk^u is used with all singular masculine nouns without life. In this case Lallā follows the modern custom.

The suffix -un^u (fem. -üñ^ü) is used only with singular male proper names, as in rāmun^u, of Rāma. Lallā uses it with other nouns also, as in samsārun^u, of the universe (6); maranüñ^ü (fem.), of dying (73-6); puhun^u, of the month of Pauṣa (83); hulā-hudüñ^ü (84) (fem.), of unknown meaning; and karmüñ^ü (fem.), of fate (107).

In the modern language -hond^u is used:—

- (1) With all feminine nouns, singular or plural.
- (2) With all masculine plural nouns.
- (3) With all animate masculine singular nouns, except proper names.

It governs the dative case, and as the dative singular of all masculine nouns ends in s, we get forms such as tūras-hond^u, of the thief; hastis-hond^u, of the elephant. In such cases, the h of -hond^u is dropped after the s, and the form for animate masculine singular nouns becomes as in tūra-sond^u, hastⁱ-sond^u. In two passages (88, K. Pr. 57) Lallā makes -hond^u govern the ablative, in lūka-hond^u, not lūka-sond^u, of people. Possibly this is for lūkan-hond^u, in the plural, with the n elided. The word lūk- is employed both in the singular and in the plural to mean 'people'.

Adjectives.—Only the numerals call for remarks. The word for 'three' is tr^ah, instead of the modern trēh or trih. It is treated as a singular, with an ablative trayi, in verse 50, as compared with the modern ablative plural trēyav. For 'five', besides the modern pānts, we have the tatsama panca (79). Other numerals, e.g. shēh, six, are treated as plurals. Cf. pl. dat. shēu (13).

Pronouns.—The pronoun of the first person calls for no remarks. For the second person, the singular dative is not only the modern ēž, but also (13) tōyēž, a form not used in modern Kāshmīrī. In the modern language, whenever the pronoun of the second person appears in a sentence, it must always also appear attached to the verb, as a pronominal suffix. For instance, we must say ēž golu-th, not ēž gol^u, destroyed by thee, i.e. thou destroyedst. But in one case (64), Lallā omits the suffix and has ēž gol^u.

The modern word for 'this' is yih. Lallā also has an older form yuh^u (for yih^u) (1, 20, 58), with a feminine yihā (54).

The modern nominative masculine of the relative pronoun yih is yus, who. That this is derived from an older yis^u is shown by Lallā's yus^u (i.e. yis^u) (20, 24, &c.). The feminine is yōsa (52), mod. yōssa.

In addition to the usual indefinite pronoun kēh, some one, any one, Lallā has (55) a plural agent kandēv, from which we can deduce a 'nominative singular koud^u, unknown to the modern language.

Under the head of phonetics, attention has been called to the form yait^u, for modern yūt^u, as much as.

Conjugation.—In the modern language the conjunctive participle ends in -it(h), derived from the Sanskrit -tya, as in mōrit(h), having killed, corresponding to a quasi-Sanskrit māritya*. In Kāshmīrī poetry and in village talk this form is sometimes used as a past participle. Thus, in the Śivaparinaya, 1630, we have chus bōh khasith, I am ascended, lit. I am having ascended. In two passages Lallā gives this participle an older form, more nearly approaching the original. In 27, she has khāsⁱtⁱ, having ascended, and in the same verse she has lāsⁱtⁱ (in the sense of the past participle), they lived long. In the modern language, the word kēth is often pleonastically added, as in dith kēth, having given; hēth kēth, having taken. In the 12th verse, Lallā gives instead of these forms dith karith and hēth karith, which show the origin of this kēth. In these Dardic languages the elision of a medial single r is common. Karith is itself the conjunctive participle of karun, to do, and its use is exactly paralleled by the Hindī use of kar-kē added pleonastically to a conjunctive participle in that language.

The present participle in the modern language ends in -ān, as in karān, doing; but in poetry and in village-speech it often ends in -an, as in karan. So, Lallā has (48) ṣhāḍan, seeking, and gwāran, searching.

The verb lōsun, to become weary, is irregular in the modern language, making its past participle lūs^u, with a feminine lūsⁱ or lūṣhⁱ. Lallā (3, 44, &c.) gives the past participle masculine as lūst^u, of which the feminine form would be, quite regularly, the modern lūṣhⁱ, which she also employs.

The Sanskrit present has become a future in modern Kāshmirī. Besides this customary sense it is also used where we should employ a present subjunctive, and, occasionally, in its original sense of a present indicative. For our present purposes we can call this Kāshmirī tense with its threefold meanings the 'Old Present'. It is thus conjugated in the modern language, taking ṣalun, to flee, as our sample verb:—

Singular.	Plural.
1. ṣala .	ṣalar .
2. ṣalakh .	ṣaliv .
3. ṣali .	ṣalan .

Corresponding to the Prakrit:—

Singular.	Plural.
1. calāmi , calañi .	calāmō , calahũ .
2. calasi , calahi .	calaha , calahu .
3. calaĩ .	calanti , calahĩ .

It may be added that the terminations of the Kāshmirī second person are evidently modern pronominal suffixes, which, as explained under the head of pronouns, must, in the case of this person, always be added to the verb.

Lallā more nearly approaches the original form of the first person singular in āsē, I may be (18), which, however, comes at the end of a line. We see traces of the original i of the second person singular in zānēkh (64), for zānakh, thou wilt know. In the third person singular she has, over and over again, a final ē instead of the final i. A few examples are mōšē (11), tūrē (16), pējē (18), gašhē (19, 45), rōšē (21), āsē (22), and so many others. In the modern language, this i usually becomes ē before pronominal suffixes.

When pronominal suffixes are added to this tense, Lallā now and then does not follow the usual modern practice. Thus, she has lagi-m, mod. lagē-m, it will be attached to me (41); khēyi-wō, mod. khēyi-wa, he will eat for you (K. Pr. 102); ninan-ay, mod. nin-ay, they will carry thee (K. Pr. 57); karin-ēy, mod. karan-ay, they will make for thee (74); mārin-ēy, mod. māran-ay, they will kill for thee (71). In the last two cases, the forms of the 3rd person plural would, in the modern language, belong to the present imperative, and not to this tense.

The past tense is formed from the past participle, which, in the masculine singular, ends in u-mātrā. Lallā lengthens this to ū at the end of a line in mōtū, for mōt^u (1). It will be observed that, unlike u-mātrā, the long ū does not epenthetically affect the preceding vowel. The feminine singular of this participle ends in ū-mātrā, but, in tyōjⁱ and pōjⁱ (both in 62), Lallā makes it end in i-mātrā. As already stated, ū-mātrā always represents an older ī.

A second form of the past tense, in the case of some verbs, ends in an(v) or ō(v), as in gan(v), (m. pl. gay), gone; pyan(v) (f. sg. pējē), fallen. For the masculine plural of gaur, Lallā once has an older form gāyⁱ (66), written gaizy in 95; and, for the feminine of pyaur, she has, with the suffix of the second person singular, pējī-y, for modern pējē-y, fell to thee.

The past tenses of two verbs require special notice. In the modern language, the past tense of karun, to do, to make, runs as follows:—m. sg. koru-m, pl. kāri-m; fem. sg. kūr^ū-m, pl. karē-m, I made, and so on for the other persons. In 81, Lallā has kīyē-m instead of karē-m, a form quite unknown to the modern language, but reminding us of the Hindī kīyā. The other verb is ḍēshun, to see, modern past participle ḍyūth^u. In the modern language, this verb always has a cerebral ḍ, but Lallā has it, as has been pointed out under the head of phonetics, both cerebral and dental. Moreover, not only does she use the modern past participle ḍyūṭh^u, but she also uses another past participle ḍyūkh^u (for ḍēkh^u) (44), which may be compared with the Hindī dēkhnā.

The third person (singular or plural) of the imperative ends in -in, as in karin, let him or them do or make. With the suffix of the first person singular it becomes kārⁱn-am, let him or them make me. Lallā changes the a of the suffix to ě in ḍāpⁱn-ěm, let him or them say to me (21); gānḍⁱn-ěm, let him or them bind on me (21); kārⁱn-ěm, let him or them make for me (21); pāḍⁱn-ěm, let him or them recite for me (18, 21). It will be remembered that there was a similar change of a to ě in the second person singular of the old present. There was also a similar change in the case of suffixes added to the third person plural of the same tense, in which the same person also took the form of the imperative.

The polite imperative is formed by adding ta to the simple imperative. At the end of a line Lallā lengthens this in hētā and pētā, both in 28. The second person plural is ḍitō, modern ḍiyⁱtaṁ, please give ye (100).

The future imperative is made by adding zi to the simple imperative. Lallā changes this to zē in pēzē, he must fall (45). A similar change occurs in khēzē, he must eat (90), but here it is at the end of a line.

Indeclinables.—These call for but few remarks. A final i becomes ē at the end of a line in atē, there (2, 98); tatē, there (41); and kunē, anywhere (9, 11; K. Pr. 201).

The adverb and conjunction ta appears in a strengthened form as tōy in several places; and similarly na, not, is strengthened to nā or nō, and the prohibitive particle ma to mō or mau. For all these see the Vocabulary.

The emphatic suffix -y is added in scores of instances without giving any emphasis at all, and apparently merely for the sake of metre. It is hence often difficult to say whether emphasis is intended or not. It often appears as an i-mātrā, and then seems to be always emphatic, as in tāsⁱ, to him only (65); lālⁱ, it is I, even I, Lallā (105); tūrⁱ, there verily (19, 61); yūrⁱ, in the very place where (61); sadōyⁱ (from sadā), always (7).

APPENDIX III

ON LALLĀ'S METRES

[BY SIR GEORGE GRIERSON]

THE subject of Kāshmīrī prosody has never been investigated, and hardly anything is known about it. The following remarks may therefore be found of interest.

We may say that, in Kashmīr, two distinct metrical systems are known and cultivated. The first is that used for formal works, such as epic poems and the like. Here Persian metres, with many irregularities and licences, are employed. Numerous examples will be found in the edition of Maḥmūd Gāmī's Fāṣuf Zulaikhā published by the late K. F. Burkhard in the 'Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft', vols. xlix and liii. In that case we have a poem written by a Muslim in the Persian character, and the use of Persian metres is to be expected, but we find the same system in epics written by Hindūs. For instance, a great portion of the Śiva-pariṇaya of Kṛṣṇa Rāzdān is in the well-known hazaj metre, and the same is employed in the narrative portions of the Śrīrāmāvatāra-carita of Dēvākara-prasāda Bhaṭṭa, a writer of the eighteenth century. As an example of the latter, I may quote a couple of lines:—

gōbur ōsus-na tautāl ōs^u tamis man tithay yitha sūrē pōñis manz chuh kōpan

He had no son, and his mind was agitated,
Just as (the reflection of) the sun trembles in the water.

If, with the customary licence, we read the words ōs^u and yitha each as one long syllable, we have at once a complete hazaj:—

U — — —, U — — —, U — —
U — — —, U — — —, U — —

The other metrical system is used in songs, and is by no means so simple a matter. I regret that, during my own stay in Kashmīr, I neglected to study it, and when, after my return to this country, I endeavoured to ascertain from native sources what rules were followed in such compositions, I failed to obtain any definite information. All that I could gather was that a poet scanned his verses by ear. A long and minute examination of scores of songs led me to no certain conclusion beyond the fact that a stress-accent seemed to play an important part. Here and there I came across traces of well-known metres, but nowhere, even allowing for the fullest licence, did they extend over more than a few lines at a time. In the year 1917, Sir Aurel Stein had occasion to visit Kashmīr, and with his ever inexhaustible kindness, undertook to investigate the question. With the help of Paṇḍit Nityānanda Śāstrī and a Śrāvākū, or professional reciter, he ascertained definitely that in songs the metre depends solely on the stress-accent. In Lallā's verses, four stresses go to each pāda, or line. Thus, if we mark the stressed syllables each with a perpendicular stroke, the first two songs would be read as follows:—

abhyōs¹ savikās¹ layē¹ wōthū¹
 gaganas¹ sagun¹ myūb^u sami¹ trātū¹ shūñ¹ gol^u ta¹ anāmay¹ mōtū¹
 yuhuy¹ wōpadēsh¹ chuy¹ batū¹

wākh¹ mānas¹ kōl-akōl¹ nā¹ atē¹ thōpi¹ mudri¹ ati¹ nā¹ pravēsh¹ rōzan¹ shiwa-shēk¹ ath¹ nā¹ atē¹ mōt^uyēy¹ kūh¹ ta¹ suy¹ wōpadēsh¹

So far as I am aware, this is not paralleled by any similar metric system in Persia or Northern India; but it is interesting to note that, although stress is the sole criterion of the metre, some of the songs give forth distant echoes of well-known Indian methods of scansion. Take, for instance, the second verse quoted above. It will not scan according to Indian rules, but nevertheless its lilt is strongly suggestive of the Indian dōhā. The dōhā is a metre based on instants, each of which is the time occupied in uttering one short syllable, one long syllable counting as two instants. Each half-verse is divided into the following groups of instants:—6 + 4 + 3, 6 + 4 + 1. The group of 3 is generally an iambus (◡ –), and the second half-line generally ends in a trochee (– ◡). The opening verse of the Sat-saiyū of Vihārī is a good Hindī example:—

mērī	bhava	-bād hā harau
6	4	1
Rād hā	nā garī	sō i
6	4	3
jā	tana kī	jhāt̃ paḍai
Śyāma	harita	duti hō i

It will be noticed that in Lallā's second verse, as in a dōhā, the first and third lines end in a strongly marked iambus. So, again, the second and fourth lines end in a heavy long closed syllable, which, with the inherent vowel, not pronounced, of the final consonant, is really a trochee, as in the above dōhā. But this is not all. In Lallā's verse, if we read the unstressed mu of mudrī, and the word nā as short, thus:—

śhōpi	mudrī atī	na pravē sh(a)

it would scan, like the second section of a dōhā in instants:—6 + 4 + 1.

In the same way, other songs that I have examined show traces of other well-known metres, Persian or Indian, and it is evident that the rude village compositions which developed into the verses of Lallā were originally intended to be based on some standard metre, but that in the mouths of the rustics stress became substituted for quantity.

So far as my experience goes, no such development has taken place in Hindōstān or the Panjāb. Here the rules of prosody depending on the quantity of each syllable are everywhere followed, although, of course, in the ruder songs, great metrical licence prevails. We observe a similar state of affairs in Southern India. A series of Kanarese Ballads was published in the Indian Antiquary by the late Dr. Fleet, and regarding them he observes¹ that they follow the principle of Kanarese metre consisting of feet of four instants each. 'But no absolute metrical precision is aimed at; and—though the principle of construction is distinctly recognizable—in carrying it out by scanning or in adapting the words to the airs, short syllables have been drawn out long and long syllables clipped short, ad libitum. . . . The rhythm of the songs can only be learned by actually hearing them sung.'

I believe that the only Indo-Aryan language that shows a tendency to substitute, as in Kāshmīrī, stress for quantity is Bengali. It will have been observed that in Lallā's verses quoted above there is a stress on the first syllable of every line. Similarly, Mr. J. D. Anderson² has shown that in Bengali verse, although quantity is sometimes nominally observed, the metre is conditioned by a strong phrasal stress-accent falling on the beginning of each line and on the first syllable after each cæsura. Usually the verse consists of a fixed number of syllables, wholly independent of quantity; and this number, regulated and controlled by the stress-accents, constitutes the metre. Mr. Anderson—and I am entirely of his opinion—is inclined to see Tibeto-Burman influence in this metrical system of Bengal. Could we be justified in suggesting a similar foreign influence in Kashmīr? The population of the Happy Valley is far from being homogeneous. Local tradition compels us to consider it as very probable that, although the upper classes are probably of the same stock as that of North-Western India, a substratum of the inhabitants is connected with non-Indian tribes whose original home was Central Asia, and this is borne out by the results of philological inquiries. It was in this substratum, not amongst the learned Paṇḍits of Kashmīr, that the rude songs which developed into Lallā's verses and into the songs of modern Kashmīr took their rise.

A well-known parallel to Lallā's abandonment of quantity in exchange for stress-accent is to be found in mediaeval Greek and Latin poetry. Here, of course, there can be no question of mutual influence, although we find just the same state of affairs. The accentual poems of Gregory of Nazianzen bear much the same relation to the other poems composed by him and by the writers of classical times that the verses of Lallā bear to the amīan̄ pāuakavvaṁ of Hāla and of the older Indian poets whose quatrains are preserved in his anthology.

VOCABULARY

THIS vocabulary contains every word in the foregoing verses of Lallā, with a reference to each place in which it occurs. The order of words is that adopted by Sir George Grierson in other works on Kāshmīrī, the arrangement being based on the English alphabetical order of the consonants, without regard to the vowels. The latter come into consideration only in cases in which the same consonant is followed, or the same consonants are separated by different vowels. Thus, the different words containing the consonants tr will be found in the succession tār, tōr, tōr^u, tūrⁱ, and tūrⁱⁱ. All words beginning with vowels are arranged together at the commencement, their mutual order being determined by the consonants. Long and nasalized vowels are not differentiated from short ones, except in cases where the difference between two words depends only on such variations. A similar principle has been followed in the case of diacritical marks. For instance, pī^his precedes pēt^{arum}, because h precedes r, the difference between ṭ and t being ignored. The letter ṣ follows t (and ṭ). As the consonants v and w merely represent different phases of the same sound, they are treated, for the purposes of alphabetical order, as the same letter.

In Kāshmīrī the sonant aspirates gh, ḡh, dh, and *bh*¹ lose their aspiration, although, in the case of tatsamas, the aspiration is sometimes retained in writing. Even in this latter respect there is no uniform custom, the same word being written indiscriminately with or without the aspiration. At one time a man will write abhyās, and at another time he will write abyās. Similarly, Lallā writes bhāryā, a wife, with bh, but būt(h) (Sanskrit bhūta), a principle of creation, with b. The latter is a Śaiva technical term, and, of all words, we should have expected it to be spelt in the Sanskrit fashion. To avoid confusion, I have therefore, for the purposes of alphabetical order, treated each of these sonant aspirates as identical with its corresponding unaspirated letter. That is to say, gh will be found in the place allotted to g, ḡh in that allotted to ḡ, dh in that allotted to d, and bh in that allotted to b.

G. A. G.

WORDS BEGINNING WITH VOWELS

- ā*, interj. added to pashi (see pashun) m. c., and with it forming pashyā, 16.
- abēd*, m. absence of difference, identity; sg. abl. abēda, while, or although, there is identity (of the soul with the Supreme), 13.
- abōd^u*, adj. one who has no knowledge, a fool, i. e. one who has no knowledge of himself; pl. nom. abōdⁱ, 6.
- abakh*, a word of doubtful meaning; perhaps = clumsy, stupid, *85, q. v.
- abal*, adj. c. g. without strength, weak, weak from sickness; f. sg. abl. abali, used as subst., 8.
- abēn*, adj. c. g. not different, identical; abēn vimarshā, (they are) identical, (as one can see) on reflection, 16.
- abhyās*, m. repeated practice, esp. of yōga or of meditation on the identity of the Self with the Supreme, 1; habitual practice of a course of conduct, 20; sg. ag. abhyōsⁱ, 1.
- achⁱ*, f. the eye; achē lagañē tūlav, the eyes to be turned upwards, K. Pr. 102; achēn hyuh^u, like the eyes, K. Pr. 201.
- ada*, adv. then, at that time, 24, 31, 61, 80, 95, 103, K. Pr. 56.
- adal ta wadal*, m. interchange, confusion, K. Pr. 102.
- adug^u*, adj. non-dual; (of the mind) convinced of the non-duality or identity of the Self with the Supreme, 5, 65.
- ahan*, I, the ego; ahan-vimarshē, by reflection on the nature of the ego, 15.
- āhūrun*, to eat food; impv. sg. 2, āhūr, 28.
- ok^u*, card. one; with emph. y, okuy, one only, the only one, the unique, 34; m. sg. abl. aki nēngi, at one time, on one occasion, 50; nimēshē aki, in a single twinkle of the eye, 26. Cf. yēka.
- akh*, card. one, 34; as indefinite article, a, 50, 83 (bis); akhāh, one, a single one, K. Pr. 150. Cf. yēka.
- ōkh*, m. a mark, a sign impressed upon anything; esp. a mark indicating eminence or excellence, 75. Cf. the next.
- ōkhun*, to make a mark: to impress a mark upon anything, to brand anything; impv. sg. 2, ōkh, 76.
- akhēr*, m. a syllable, such as the syllable ōm, or the like, 10.
- akōl*, m. that which transcends the kula, i. e. the sphere of the Absolute, or of Transcendental Being, 79; kōl-akōl, the totality of all creation, 2. See kōl, and Note on Yōga, § 19.

akriy, adj. c. g. not acting, free from work; hence, in a religious sense, free from the bond of works as an impediment to salvation, in a state of salvation, 32, 45.

al, m. wine (offered to a god), 10 (cf. pal); the wine of bliss or nectar of bliss, said to flow from the digits of the moon (see sōm); al-thān, the place of this nectar, the abode of bliss, i.e. union with the Supreme, 60. Al-thān, however, may also be explained as equivalent to the Sanskrit alamsthāna, i.e. the place regarding which only 'nēti nēti' can be said, or which can be described by no epithet, the highest place (anuttara pada), i.e. also, union with the Supreme.

ālav, m. a call, a cry;—dyunū, to summon, K. Pr. 102.

ālawun, to wave, move up and down; pres. part. ālawān, K. Pr. 57.

ōm, the mystic syllable ōm, the praṇava; sg. gen. ōmaki cōbāka, with the whip of the praṇava, 101; ōm-kār, the syllable ōm, 34, 82.

It is believed that the syllable ōm contains altogether five elements, viz. a, u, m, and the Bindu and Nāda, on which see Note on Yōga, §§ 23, 24, and anāhath.

ōm, adj. raw, uncooked; (of an earthen vessel) unbaked, 106; (of a string) not twisted, and hence without strength, 106; m. sg. abl. āmī, 106; m. pl. dat. āmēn, 106.

amolū, adj. undefiled, pure, free from all defilement (of the Supreme), 64.

amalōnū, adj. (f. amalōnū), undefiled, 21 (f. sg. nom.).

amar, m. immortality; amara-pathi, on the path (leading) to immortality, i.e. in the path of reflection on the Self or ego, 70.

amrēth, m. the water of immortality, nectar, amṛta; sg. abl. amrēta-sar, the lake of nectar, i.e. of the nectar of bliss (ānanda) of union with the Supreme, 68. Regarding the nectar distilled from the microcosmic moon, see Note on Yōga, §§ 8, 19, 21, 22.

anād, adj. c. g. without beginning, existing from eternity, an epithet of the Supreme, 72.

andar, postpos. in, within; kūtharē-andar, in the closet, 101; andaray aṣun, one must enter into the very inmost part, 94; andariy, from the inmost recesses, 109.

andarayumū, adj. (f. andarimū, 104), belonging to the interior, inner, 4, 104.

anāhath, adj. c. g. unobstructed, whose progress is perpetual; (often) that of which the sound is everlasting, the mystic syllable ōm (15), also called the anāhath shēbd, or (33) anāhata-rav. In Sanskrit it is called the anāhata-dhvani (Note on Yōga, § 23). It is described as having the semblance of inarticulateness (avyaktānukṛtiprūya), to be uttered only by the deity dwelling within the breast of living creatures, and therefore to have no human utterer or obstructor of its sound. It is composed of a portion of all the vowels nasalized, and is called anāhath (Skr. anāhata), i.e. perpetual, because it never comes to a close but vibrates perpetually (an-astam-ita-rūpatwāt). Another explanation of the name is that it is 'sound caused without any percussion', i.e. self-created. It is said (33) to take its rise from the heart and to issue through the nose. In 15, it is described as identical with, or as equivalent to, the Supreme Himself.

As a Śaiva technical term anāhata sometimes does not designate ōm, but is applied to other things. For instance, it is used as the name of the fourth of the mystic cakras, or circles. See Note on Yōga, §§ 15, 17, 23, 25, 27.

ann, pl. m. food, victuals, 28.

anun, to bring; wagi anun, to bring under the rein, to bring into subjection, 37; layē anun, to bring under subjection by concentration of the mind and breath, 82.

Fut. sg. 3, ani, 37; past. part. m. sg. with suff. 1st pers. sg. ag. onum, 82.

ant, m. an end; ānti (54) or āntih (33, 37, 38, 41, 61), adv. in the end, finally, ultimately.

anway, m. logical connexion; tenor, drift, purport; the real truth (concerning anything), 59.

apān, m. one of the five vital airs (1, prāṇa, 2, apāna, 3, samāna, 4, ulāna, 5, vyāna). Of these, two (prāṇa and apāna) are referred to by L. D. See Note on Yōga, § 16 note.

The apāna (Ksh. apān) is the vital air that goes downwards and out at the anus. The prāṇa is that which goes upwards and is exhaled through the mouth and nose. For perfect union with the Supreme, it is necessary to bring these two into absolute control, 26. Cf. Deussen, Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie, i. 2, p. 248, 3, p. 70. See Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 16, 21, 23, and Articles nāḍi and prān, 2, for full particulars.

gagan, m. the sky, firmament (in contrast to the earth), 22, 42.

Used as an equivalent to the Śaiva technical term ākāśa or the wide expanse of empty space; hence, ethereality or the principle of vacuity (in 1 used as synonymous with shūñ), one of the five physical factors, or bhūtas, viz. the principles of the experience of (1) solidity, (2) liquidity, (3) formativity, (4) aeriality, (5) ethereality or vacuity (see Kashmir Śaivism, 48, 131, 133, 140, 141, 145). It is also conceived as sound as such, i.e. sound conceived, not as a sensation within the brain, but as an objective entity. It is supposed to fill the inside of the body, its centre being the heart (cf. Note on Yōga, § 23). But by the word 'heart' is not meant the physiological organ, but the centre of the body, imagined as a hollow, and filled with this ākāśa (translation of Śivasūtra-vimarśinī, p. 29). Gagan is used in this sense of the principle of vacuity in 1 and 26.

Sg. dat. gaganas-kun, (the earth spreads out) to the sky, 22; gaganas, in the vacuity, 1; old sg. loc. gaganⁱ, 26.

This is really an adjective with the substantive understood, what (thing)?; kyāh, what? 21, 34, 42, 68, 71, 73, 81, 84, 85, 91 (bis), 95, 98 = K. Pr. 18; K. Pr. 102; kyāh-lām, something or other, 86; kēh na ta kyāh, there is nothing, so what (is there?), = all is vanity, 19; jān kyāh, what a good thing!, how well!, 89; adj. kus sar, what lake?, 78; kus parama-pad, what supreme state?, 78.

Abl. subst. kawa, by what?, used adverbially to mean 'how?', 41, 'why?', 56 (bis); adj. kami dishi, from what direction?, by what direction?, 41 (bis); kami watē, by what road?, 41; kami shātha, on what bank?, 84, 85; kawa dōñi, with what stream?, 39; kawa-sana mantra, with what kind of mantra?, 39.

Plural nom. adj. kam kusum, what flowers?, 39; kam vihi, what sports?, 109.

kyāh, 2, adv. interrog. why?, 67, 74. Used as a mere interrogative particle, indicating a question, 18, 66.

kyōh, conj. as well as, and, in the adverbial phrase dēn kyōh rāth, day and night, i.e. continually, always, 3, 5, 65.

A variant form is dēn kyāwu rāth, 19.

kyuth^u, pron. adj. interrog. what sort of?, of what kind?, 84, 85; with another adj., kyuth^u dru^u, how firm?, 71.

kō-zana, adv. or interj. who knows?; used in anxiety or the like, as in kō-zana kyāh bani tas, who knows what will happen to him, i.e. some calamity will probably occur to him. But Lal seems to use it as a mere adv. meaning 'by what means', quasi 'who knows what means (will effect so and so)', 73, 74. In 72, she has kō-zanañi, i.e. in the ablative feminine of the genitive, and uses it as a relative adverb meaning 'how', 'by what means' (God takes thought as to the means by which hunger will depart from thee).

lūb, desire, greed, cupidity, the chief of the six 'enemies', or sins which impede union with the Supreme. The six are kāma, sexual desire; krōdha, wrath; lobha, desire; māda, arrogance; mōha, delusion of mind; and matsara, jealousy. In Monier Williams's Sanskrit Dictionary, s.v. ṣaḍ-varga, harṣa, joy, and māna, pride, are substituted for mōha and matsara; but the above is the list given in Kirātārjunīya, i. 9, viz. :—

kāmah krōdhas tathā lōbhō māda-mōhau ca matsarah.

In L. V. 12 and 30, lobha, or Ksh. lūb, is mentioned alone, to indicate all six. In 43, three,—lobha, manmatha (= kāma), and māda,—and in 71, kāma, krōdha (Ksh. krūd), and lobha, are in each case mentioned to indicate all six. Cf. 13.

labun, to get, obtain, acquire, find; fut. sg. 2, labakh, 75; 3, labi, 90, with emph. y, labiy, K. Pr. 46; past part. m. sg. with suff. 1st pers. sg. ag. lobum, 35, 90; f. sg. with same suff. lūbūm, 31.

Pr. 102.

Fut. sg. 1, laga, 84, 85; 3, lagi, 70; with suff. 1st pers. sg. dat. and emph. y, lagimay (for lagēmay), 41; past. m. sg. 3, with suff. 1st pers. sg. dat. and interj. ō, log^umō, 58; f. pl. 3, lajě, K. Pr. 102.

lāgun, to join, unite, apply (pānas lōgith mēčě, having applied earth to the body, 44, see below); to employ (an article for a certain use), to apply (something to a certain purpose), esp. to employ (a thing in worship), to make an offering (of something), 39, 40, 42, 78, 79; to act the part of (so and so), to perform the office (of so and so), to act in (such and such) a capacity, 43; in 44 (see above) pānas lōgith also (by a pun) means 'having become hidden in thyself', i.e. of God, 'having become indiscrete'.

lōh-langar, m. an iron anchor, an anchor; met. that which ties one down to this world, the things of this world (as opposed to spiritual things), worldly possessions and business, 67; sg. gen. (f. sg. nom.) lōh-langarūc^ū, 67.

lějü, f. a cooking-pot ; sg. dat. lějě, 95.

lěkh, f. abusive language (usually indecent) ; lěkā-lěkh, mutual abuse, 23.

lūkh, m. people, persons, K. Pr. 57 ; people in general, 53 ; a stranger, one who is not related by blood, marriage or other connexion, other people than oneself, 88 ; K. Pr. 57. Note that the genitive of this word is twice lūka-hond^u, 88 ; K. Pr. 57.

lūka-garu, into other people's houses (see gara), 53 ; lūka-sāsā, a thousand people, K. Pr. 57 ; lūka-hanzay larě, houses of other people, K. Pr. 57 ; see hond^u.

lěkhun, to write ; past part. m. sg. with suff. 2nd pers. sg. dat. lyūkhuy, (what) was written for thee (by Nārāyaṇa), i.e. what Nārāyaṇa wrote (on) thy (forehead),—an allusion to the lines of Fate written on the forehead of a person's skull on the sixth night after birth, 107.

lal, f. N. P., N. of Lal Dēd, known in Sanskrit as Lallā, the authoress of the poems edited in this volume, 3, 48, 49, 68, 81, 82, 83, 93, 102 ; with emph. lālⁱ, even Lal ; lālⁱ lālⁱ karān, making (the cry) (i.e. crying out) ' (it is) even (I) Lal, (it is) even (I) Lal,' 105 ; sg. dat. lali, 84, 94 ; ag. lali, 76, 93, 103, 104 ; (m. c.) lālē, 76.

lilāmⁱ, f. pl. actings, taking parts in a theatrical performance, 81. The word has not been noted elsewhere, and its form, as a feminine plural, is unexpected. It is a question whether we should not read lila mē, lila being the f. nom. pl. of lil or lila (Skr. lilū), and mē being the agent case of lōh, I.

lulith, adv. artlessly, gently, 67 (his).

lāmā, f. one of the divine mothers or personified energies (śakti) of the principal deities, in Sanskrit mātrkā, variously reckoned as 7, 8, 9, or 16 in number. They are closely connected with the worship of Śiva ; lāmā-ṭak^{ar}, the circle or assemblage of these mothers (Skr. mātrkā-maṇḍala) ; lāmā-ṭakra-posh^u, a beast devoted for sacrifice in the joint worship of all these mothers,—used met. to signify anything devoted, or destined, to destruction, 63.

lamun, to pull (razi, a rope), 95 ; to tow (nāvi, a boat), 106 ; pres. f. sg. 1, chēs lamān, 106 ; cond. past, pl. 3, lamahōn, 95.

lar, f. the side or flank of the body; dachiñi lari, (lying) on the right side, K. Pr. 57.

lürü, f. a house; sg. dat. larě, 101; pl. nom. larě, K. Pr. 57.

lūrun, to pull down or destroy (a house, wall, or the like); conj. part. lūrith, 74.

lasun, to live long, to live in good health and prosperously, 27, 35; to live, to be a survivor amongst a number of mortals, K. Pr. 150; fut. sg. 1, lasa, 35; past m. sg. 3, with emph. y, lūstuy, K. Pr. 150; pl. 3 (really conj. part., see App. II, p. 140) lāsⁱtⁱ, 27.

lōsun, to become weary, 48, 60, K. Pr., 57; (of the day), to fail, to become evening, (or of the night) to fade away, to become morning, 3, 44, 98; K. Pr. 18. The past part. of this verb is lūs^u or lūst^u; fem. sg. lūs^ü or lūš^hü, pl. lōsa.

Past m. sg. 3, with suff. 1st pers. sg. dat., lūstum, (the day) passed away for me, 3, 44, 98; K. Pr. 18; f. sg. 1 lūš^hüs, 48, 60; f. pl. 3, with suff. 1st pers. sg. gen. narě lōsam, my arms grew weary, K. Pr. 57.

lath, f. a kick, 102 (bis).

lūš^hüs, see lōsun.

lawan, m. salt; lawan-zān, like salt, 29.

lawar, ? gend., a rope; sēki-lawar, a rope of sand, 107. The word does not occur in vocabularies of modern Kāshmīrī, but cf. mod. Ksh. lar, f. the strand of a rope.

lay, 1, m. absorption; (with dat.) lay karun, to make absorption (in anything), to become absorbed in, 76. This word is generally feminine. See lay, 2.

lay, 2, f. absorption; ardent affection or desire, K. Pr. 201; destruction; lay karüñ^ü, (with dat.) to practise (anything) steadfastly and with ardent devotion, to devote oneself (to any particular practice), 60, 68; layě anun, to bring (anything) to absorption, to bring (anything) under one's own power by concentration of mind, 82; layě wōthun, to rise to destruction, to become dissolved into nothingness, 1. Cf. lay, 1. Sg. dat. 1, 82; layi-hyuh^u, like ardent love, K. Pr. 201.

layun, to become absorbed (in the Supreme), to reach final beatitude; to become dissolved into nothingness; past m. pl. 3 lāyⁱ (in both meanings), 59.

ma, prohibitive particle, used with the imperative. With the interj. bā, ma-bā trāwun, do not, Sir, let it go, 88. With the pol. impve. mata, q. v., is used. Other forms of ma are mau and mō, see mō.

mā, the interrogative form of ma. Used with the imperative it gives practically the force of a negative interrogative future, as in hēyiv mā, will ye not buy? i.e. why do ye not buy?, 89.

mō or mau, i. q. ma, q. v. mō gārun, do not seek it, 30; mau ās, be not, 36; bhayē mō bar, to not feel fear, 72.

man, m. the mind, the thinking faculty (Skr. manas), 5, 12, 17, 18, 45, 65, 93; K. Pr. 57. This is roughly the meaning of the word, and will suit for the translation of the above passages, but, as a term of Śaiva philosophy, it is not sufficiently accurate. According to Deussen (Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie, I, 3, p. 490; cf. ib., pp. 58 ff., 352, 374, 604 ff., 648), the functions of the manas are that 'on the one hand, it forms the impressions delivered by the organ of cognition (buddhi) into conceptions, which are then preserved as finished products of cognition in the buddhi. On the other hand, it executes the decisions derived from the buddhi by influencing the organs of action'. This technical meaning of manas (Ksh. man) can be traced in its use in 23, 27, 31, 40, 79, 80, 105.

In L. V. 71, the meaning of man is further extended to indicate the exercise of the thinking faculty, careful thought. Man raṭun, to seize the mind, to bring it under subjection, 55; swa-man, one's own mind, 68, 98. In 68, there is a play upon words, swaman being also used as equivalent to sōman or suman, the jasmine.

Sg. dat. manas, 17, 31; with emph. y, manasay, 23; loc. mani, 18, 45; abl. mana, 80, 98; with emph. y, manay, 71; gen. (m. sg. abl.) manaki, K. Pr. 57.

mān, m. the possession of a good reputation, respectability, 24. māṇḍal, m. a circular disk, 75 (cf. sūrya); a district, locality, 33 (cf. dwādashānth).

manth^{ar}, m. a religious mystic formula (Skr. mantra), 11, 34 (bis), 39, 40, 58. A mantra is an aggregation of apparently unmeaning sounds. It has no efficacy unless the utterer is aware of the mystic meaning of each sound, which has to be taught by a guru, or spiritual preceptor. By meditating on a mantra, with full knowledge, unity with the Supreme is attained.

Sg. abl. mantra, 39, 40 ; pl. nom. manth^{ar}, 34.

manz, postpos. governing dat., in ; pānas-manz, in myself, 44. In 98, it means 'having reached the middle', and exceptionally governs the abl. (swamana-sōthi manz, having reached the middle of the embankment of (the illusions of) my own mind, or suman-sōthi manz, having reached the middle of an embankment (furnished) with small bridges). In K. Pr. 57, manz precedes the word it governs,—manz maidānas, in a field.

manza, postpos. governing abl., from among, out of (so many) ; lachē-manza sūsa-manza, out of a hundred thousand (or) out of a thousand (only one is saved), K. Pr. 150.

na . . . na, neither . . . nor, K. Pr. 46; na ta, and not, nor, 96 (bis), 97; K. Pr. 47 (bis), 102; na . . . na . . . ta, not . . . nor . . . nor, 15; na-ta, otherwise, or else, 19 (ter), 71; K. Pr. 150; nay (na + ay), if not, see s. v. Cf. nā, 1, and nō. The negative used with the present impv. is ma, and with the pol. impv. mata, qq. v. With the fut. impv. na is generally used, but cf. nō.

nā, 1, negative, i. q. na, 2 (ter), 9, 11, 12 (ter), 18, 23, 27 (bis), 45 (bis), 47, 55, 59 (quater); nā . . . nā, neither . . . nor, 7; zēn nā zēn, they are being born (and) they are not being born, i. e. when they are hardly born, immediately on being born, 47.

nō, negative, i. q. na and nā, 1; 29 (bis), 31, 41, 67, 70 (bis), 90 (bis); K. Pr. 46. In 70 and 90, nō is used with the future impv. Cf. na.

nāb, f. the navel; a focus, or central point, hence the focus of the body, the kanda, or bulb, between the pudendum and the navel, which is the root of the nādis, or tubes, through which the prāna, or life-wind, circulates. See Note on Yōga, § 5. Sg. abl. nābi, 34; nābi-sthāna, of the region of the kanda, 57. Regarding the heat in the navel, see prān, 2.

nābad, m. sugar-candy; nābādⁱ-bār, a load of sugar-candy, 108.

nēbar, adv. outside, abroad, 4; K. Pr. 102 (bis); nēb^ara, from outside, 94.

nēch, adj. good, 35 (bis); as adv. well, successfully, fortunately, 37. The more usual form of this word is nēkh, cf. Prs. nēk.

nēchatur, m. a lunar asterism; the season during which the sun, or the moon, is passing through a lunar asterism; hence, a time or moment fixed by astrology, 3.

nad, f. a river, 57, 96; K. Pr. 47; sg. dat. sūlⁱ nadi, (contact) with the river, 57.

- nād*, m. a cry, call, loud sound, 72. For nāda-bindu (15), see bindu.
- nāḍi*, f. a tube, artery, vein; esp. the tubes through which the vāyu, or life-winds, circulate. See Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 6, 21. There are fourteen of these,—rising from the kanda, or region between the pudendum and the navel (cf. nāb). Of these fourteen, ten (named īḍā, piṅgalā, sūsumnā, gāndhārī, hastijihvā, pūṣā, yaśasvinī, alambuṣā, kuḥū, and śaṅkhinī) are the principal (hence the dashē-nāḍi-wāv of L. V. 69). The principal vital airs are five in number, viz. prāṇa, or upward flowing air, which has its seat in the lungs; apāna, or downward flowing air; udāna, which rises in the throat, and enters the head; samāna, which has its seat in the cavity of the navel, and is essential to digestion; and vyāna, that which is diffused through the whole body. These course through the various nāḍis, and the object of the Śaiva ascetic is to restrain them by prāṇāyāma. For this exercise, see Note on Yōga, § 21. By it, the prāṇa and apāna are united to the udāna. The fire of udāna then rises in the central nāḍi, which causes the dissolution of prāṇa and apāna, thus leading to samādhi, or consciousness independent of objects (see Translation of Śivasūtra-vimarśinī, pp. x and 41). Hence, L. V. 69 mentions the uniting of the winds of the ten nāḍis. In L. V. 80, nāḍi-dal is 'the collection of nāḍis', 'the whole group of nāḍis'. The authoress wishes that she had been able to bring the ten nāḍis under her mental control (by prāṇāyāma, &c.), and thus been able to obtain samādhi.
- nador^u*, 1, m. the stalk of the lotus, which is eaten when cooked with oil and condiments, 89, with play on the meaning of nador^u, 2.

par, 1, adj. another than oneself, 5, 7.

par, 2, m. He Who is Supreme, the Supreme Deity, 59; swa-para-vēśār, meditation on oneself and on the Supreme, or on the Supreme Self, 59, but see art. swa.

par, 3, a wing; pl. nom. par, 99 = K. Pr. 46.

pairiv, see pūr^u.

pūr^u, m. a foot; pl. abl. pairiv, on one's feet, 38.

probh^u, m. a lord; hence, the Supreme Deity, 64.

parud^u, m, a stranger, some one else, a person with whom one has no connexion; pl. dat. paradēn, 92.

prah, f. adoring love, (to God) 105, (or for the world) 83; sg. dat. (in sense of instr.), prahē (m. c. for prahi), 105.

prakrēth, f. prakṛti, i.e. (in Śaivism) primal matter (as opposed to spirit), primitive non-intelligent being, the root of all feeling, affection in the widest sense of the term, as experienced by the puruṣa, or individual soul (see Kashmir Śhaivism, fasc. i., pp. 50, 89), 25; the nature of anything, 57. See Note on Yōga, § 1.

prakāsh, m. light, illumination, 4, 6, 9, 35, 82; K. Pr. 201 (ter); bōdha-prakāsh (35) or jñāna-prakāsh (6), the illumination of knowledge; prakāshē-sthān, the place of illumination, i.e. the stage of attainment of true wisdom, 82; sg. dat. prakāshēs, 6.

param or (77) paramu, adj. Supreme; parama-gath, the way of the Supreme, final beatitude, 103; parama-pad (10, 78, 79), the position of the Supreme, or paramu pad (77), the supreme position, hence, final beatitude; hence, also the Supreme Śiva (10, 77, 79); parama-Shiv, the supreme Śiva (gen. -Shivun^u), 58.

paramēshwar, m. the Supreme Lord, God; sg. voc. paramēshwarā, 56.

prān, 1, m. an onion, 89, 90, in both cases with a double meaning, referring also to prān, 2. So, with similar double meaning, prāna-śūr, a thief of onions, or the thief of my vital breath, 101.

prān, 2, m. the vital breath (in 89, 90, 101, this word is used with a double meaning, in the sense of 'vital breath', and also in the sense of prān, 1, an onion); hence, life, the body as a living entity, 90 (ter).

According to Hindū scriptures there are five principal vital airs (vāyu) in the body, viz. prāna, apāna, samāna, udāna, and vyāna. See Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 16. Of these, two (prāna and apāna) are referred to by Lallā. There are also five secondary vital airs, or upapṛāna, named nāga, kūrma, kṛkala, dēvadatta, and dhanamjaya, respectively.

According to the Mahābhārata (xii, 6844 ff.) prāna resides within the head, and, with the heat that is there, causes all kinds of exertion. The prāna is the living creature, the universal soul, the Eternal Being, the Mind, Intellect, and Consciousness of all living creatures, &c. Thus, the living being is, in every respect, caused by prāna to move about and exert himself.... The heat, residing between apāna and prāna in the region of the navel (cf. L. V. 57), operates, with the aid of these two breaths, in digesting all food that is taken by a living creature. There is a tube beginning from the mouth and ending in the anal canal. From this main tube numerous subsidiary tubes branch out in the bodies of all living creatures (see art. nāḍī). In consequence of the rush of the several breaths (the ten just mentioned,—see also below), these breaths mingle together. The heat that dwells in prāna causes digestion.... The prāna, bearing a current of heat, descends from the head downwards to the extremity of the anal canal, and thence is pushed upwards again. Coming back to its seat in the head, it once more sends back the heat that it bears.... The main tube leading from the mouth to the anus is the path by which Yōgins succeed in attaining to the Supreme by holding the soul within the brain (Sörensen's Index to the Mahābhārata, s. v. prāna).

The above is the account given in the Mahābhārata. Later accounts describe the five principal airs as follows:—prāna is the upward flowing air which has its seat in the lungs, and is exhaled through the mouth and nose (L. V. 57 accounts for its heat by stating that it rises from the region of the navel: see nāb); apāna is the downward flowing air, which is expelled from the anus; udāna is that which rises in the throat, and enters the head; samāna is that which has its seat in the cavity of the navel, and is essential to digestion; and vyāna that which is diffused through the whole body. These course through the various tubes, or nāḍis, and the object of the Śaiva ascetic is to restrain them, the process being called prāṇāyāma. For the methods by which this process is carried out, see Note on Yōga, § 21.

The main object is to bring prāna and apāna under complete control, as stated in L. V. 26. Cf. pawan, which Lallā uses as equivalent to prān. On the whole subject, see Deussen, Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie, I. 2, p. 248; 3, p. 70.

Reference has already been made to L. V. 26 and 57. In 89 (in one meaning) people are invited to take, or grasp, the vital breath (so as to bring it under control). In the other meaning, they are invited to buy onions (prān, 1). In 90, the word prān has, perhaps, the more general sense of the ordinary breath of life, or one's own body as a living being. In 101, prāna-śūr may be translated 'a thief of onions', and also 'the thief of vital breath', i.e. the worldly temptations which prevent the proper control of the prāna. In 69, wāv, wind, is used, as a synonym of prān, for the vital airs.

pūrun, to fill; hence, to inhale breath (37) in the process of prānāyāma; see prān, 2; conj. part. pūrith, 37.

In Sanskrit, the process of inhalation is called pūraka, while the retention, or 'bottling up' of the inhaled breath is called kumbhaka. See Note on Yōga, § 21, and kumbū.

shēh (13) or shē (25), card. six; ag. sg. shēyⁱ, by (a group of) six, 13; pl. dat. (for gen.) shēn, (a lord) of six, 13.

The number six has various mystic meanings. Thus, there are six attributes of the Deity, viz. (1) sarvajñatā, omniscience, (2) trpti, contentment, (3) anādibōdha, having perception from eternity, (4) svatantratā, absolute independence, or absolute self-sufficiency, (5) nityam-aluptasakti, having potency that is incapable of being diminished, and (6) anantasakti, omnipotence. There are six enemies, or sins which impede union with the Supreme. For a list of these, see tūb. There are six ūrmis, or human infirmities, viz. (1) sōka, grief, (2) mōha, delusion, (3) jarā, old age, (4) marāṇa, death, (5) kṣudh, hunger, and (6) pipāsā, thirst. There are six avasthās, or periods of human life, (1) śīśutva, babyhood, (2) bālya, childhood, (3) kaumāra, youth, (4) yauvana, puberty, (5) tārūnya, young manhood, and (6) vār-dhakya, old age. Some omit numbers 1 and 5, and have only four periods, translating yauvana by 'manhood'. All these sextets are referred to in 13. There are, further, six vikāras, or changes of condition, in a man's life, indicated by the six verbs, astī, he exists; jāyatē, he is born; vardhatē, he grows up; vipariṇamatē, he is developed; apakṣīyatē, he declines; and naśyati, he is destroyed (82).

In 25 and 82, reference is made to the six cakras, or circles, regarding which, see Note on Yōga, §§ 9, 13 ff.

shēhol^u, 1, m. coolness; shēhol^u karun, to make coolness, to cool oneself, K. Pr. 102.

shēkun, to fear, to be afraid; impv. fut. shēkizi, 70.

shēkath, f. the śakti, or energetic power of a deity, conceived as the female consort of the latter; esp. in these poems, the Śakti of Śiva. She is the immanent aspect of Śiva, i.e. the aspect in which he pervades the universe. She is not in any way different from, or independent of, the Supreme Śiva, but is one and the same with him. She is immanent in every human being, and has herself an infinite number of aspects or modes. In order to obtain final emancipation, it is necessary to grasp the fact of her essential oneness with the Supreme, 68; Śhiva-shēkath, Śiva and his Śakti, 2.

sōhil, ? m. the seashore, K. Pr. 46.

shēm, tranquillity, quietism, quietude, absence of passion, 71; shēm-dam, quietude and self-restraint; sg. abl. shēma-dama-kriyē-pūñū, the hedge of holy acts joined to quietism and self-restraint, 63.

sō'ham (90), a Sanskrit formula meaning 'I am He', or 'I am That', and expressing the identity of the soul with the Supreme. With the letters reversed, it becomes hamsa, which is used as a mantra, or mystic formula. See hams, 2.

shēmbhu, Śambhu, a name of Śiva; sg. dat. shēmbhus, 45.

shēmun, to be quiet, to be at peace, 27; (of water) to be at rest (and gradually soak away), 106; pres. part. shēmān, 106; fut. sg. 3, shēmi, 27.

shēnkar, m. Saṅkara, a name of Śiva, 25; shēnkar-svātma, Śiva (recognized as) one with Self, 39, 40; shēnkara-bokt^u, one who is full of devotional faith to Śiva, f. -bhūktū, 18.

shūñ, m. the transcendental Void, emptiness (Skr. śūnya); in Śaiva philosophy, the imaginary body in which one feels oneself in dreams, a vague, indistinct, and undefined something which is practically 'Nothing', not unlike the 'nothing' of the experience of the really dreamless deep-sleep state in our waking life (see Śiva-sūtra-vimarṣini, trans. p. 18, and Kashmir Shaivism, pp. 77, 82). When a Universe comes into apparent existence, the Supreme Being, after a course of development through various phases (K. Shaivism, pp. 62 ff.), associates Himself with Māyā (illusion), and thereby becomes subjected to limited individual experience. In the first stage of this association, He, as the experiencer, loses the realization of Himself as the Self of the experience; and, as this happens, He becomes sleepy. In this sleep His perception of Himself as 'All This' becomes dim, as the vague, undefined, something, or sūnya, already mentioned. Sūnya may therefore be looked upon as the first stage in limited consciousness, and in the reverse order (of the soul becoming united with the Supreme) it is therefore the last stage of limited consciousness before the soul becomes conscious of universal experience as one with the Supreme in one of the five phases or conditions prior to this association with Māyā. In the microcosm of the body, Yōgīs locate this sūnya in the sahasrāra. See Note on Yōga, §§ 20, 24.

Hence Lallā, in 1, says that, when the shūñ (i.e. sūnya) became dissolved (in the course of union with the Deity) only pure (i.e. universal) consciousness remained.

Lallā is fond of the expression shūñēs shūñāh mīlith gauv (11, 30, 69). Here shūñēs is the dative singular, and shūñāh is the nominative singular with the suffix of the indefinite article, and the whole means literally 'a void became merged in the Void' that is to say, a thing which is really nothing, or mere emptiness, became merged in the Great Sūnya explained above. The thing which is really nothing is the apparent material existence,—the material world, or the consciousness of the material world. With the acquirement of true knowledge, its unreality is recognized, and the apparent reality disappears in the transcendental Void. Cf. the remarks on L. V. 69 in art. sōm.

Sg. nom. shūñ, 1; with suff. indef. art. shūñāh, 11, 30, 69; dat. shūñēs, 11, 30, 69.

shūñālay, m. he whose abode is the Great Void (see shūñ), i.e. the Supreme, 15.

shēshi, m. the moon; shēshi-kal, a digit of the moon, 25, 69; shēshi-ras, moon-juice, the water of immortality, nectar, amṛta, sg. abl. -rasa, 40. For the mystic terminology in connexion with the moon in Śaiva theology, see art. sōm.

shās^{at}r, m. a holy book, the general body of sacred writings; sg. abl. shāstra, 27.

shēs^{at}r, m. iron; sg. dat. shēst^{at}ras, 100 = K. Pr. 46.

shēth, card. a hundred; shēth-shēti, hundreds, 6.

shiv, m. Śiva, the Supreme Deity, absorption in whom is final emancipation, 8, 14, 51-54, 80; sg. gen. shiwun^u, 58; dat. shiwas, 68; voc. shiwa shiwa karān, uttering the cry of 'Śiva! Śiva!', i.e. meditating on the fact that all that exists is one with Him, 65; shiwa-may, made up of Śiva, consisting of Śiva, 16; shiwa-pūzan, the worship of Śiva, 22; shiwa-shēk^{at}h, Śiva and his śakti, or energetic power, 2, cf. 68, and art. shēk^{at}h; parama-shiv, the Supreme Śiva (gen. -shiwun^u), 58; tētana-shiv, Śiva in his quality of Supreme Spirit, as opposed to his more material manifestations, 79.

shēwo^u, m. the six-staged road, i.e. either the six vikāras or the six cakras (see art. shēh), 82.

sahaz, adj. inborn, natural, innate; as subst. m. natural character, true nature, reality; hence, obl. sg. sahaza, as adv. naturally, innately, 18 (according to one interpretation), 45; as an epithet of the Supreme Śiva, sahaz means 'He who is real and true', 18 (according to another interpretation), 43; sahaza-kusum, a flower of the true nature, i.e. a flower born from one's inner soul, a flower which is a true offering of love; or (?) a flower of reality, a real flower, 21 (see note to the verse).

In Sanskrit, the compound sahaja-vidyā means 'the knowledge, or state of experience, in which the true relation of things is realized'. It is the consciousness of the identity of the Self with Śiva. Lallā frequently uses the word sahaz, by itself, with this meaning of 'the nature of Self'. Thus, in 29, she has sahazā-vēṭār, discrimination as to the nature of Self, and in 30 she has sahaz vēṣārun, exercise this discrimination as to the nature of Self. From the idea of 'the nature of Self', it comes to mean 'knowledge of the nature of Self'. Thus, in 29, we are told that quietude and self-command are not necessary causes sahazas, i.e. of a knowledge of the nature of Self. Similarly, sahaz has the same meaning in 35 and 62.

Sg. nom. sahaz, 30, 35, 43; dat. sahazas, 29, 62; abl. and obl. sahaza, 18, 21, 29, 45.

sēkh, f. sand; sg. obl. sēki-lawar, a rope of sand, a rope made by twisting sand, an impossibility, 107.

sukh, m. happiness, ease, K. Pr. 201 (ter).

sakharun, to prepare for a journey, to set out; to set oneself to any task, busy oneself with, 10; impve. sg. 2, sakhar, 10.

sakol^u, adj. all, the whole, everything, 38; m. pl. nom. with emph. y, sakaliy, 1, all men, 47 (according to another interpretation, this is sakaliy, 2, below, q. v.).

sakaliy, 2, adv. without having eaten food, hungry and athirst, 47 (see the preceding).

sul, f. the early time, the time before any fixed time; hence, the propitious time (for doing anything), 99 (= K. Pr. 46), 100. The word often means 'early dawn', and perhaps also has this meaning in these passages.

sōm, m. the moon. The moon plays a considerable part on the mystic side of Śaivism, and is frequently mentioned in this connexion in the Lallā-vākyāni. In these verses it appears under four different names, viz. shēshi (25, 40, 69), sōm (34), ṭand^aar (9, 22, 109), and ṭand^aarama (93), corresponding, respectively, to the Sanskrit śaśin-, sōma-, candra-, and candramas-. It will be convenient to bring together the various mentions of the moon, and to explain the mystic references thereto.

As explained in the Note on Yōga (§§ 9, 13 ff.), starting from the base of the abdomen,—the mūlādihāra, or sacral plexus,—upwards along the spinal cord there are in the body six cakras, or circles. Over these is the seventh, the sahasrāra, or medulla oblongata (§§ 19, 27). In this sahasrāra, in mystic parlance, is the moon, and also the abode of the Parama Śiva, or Supreme Śiva,—the transcendental realm named Kailāsa or Akula (§ 19). By blocking up the breath in the nāḍis, while meditating upon this sahasrāra cakra, the Yōgī tries to enter into the highest samādhi, or mental absorption, in which the citta, or organ of thought, is absorbed, microcosmically, into sahasrāra, and, macrocosmically, into Parama Śiva (§ 21).

This is mukti, or final release,—what we should call salvation.

The above explains the reference in L. V. 25, in which the authoress says that by continual suppression of her vital breaths she had cut her way through the six forests (i.e. the cakras), so that the digit of the moon awoke and appeared to her.

Similarly, in 34, she refers to a Yōgī, in whose kanda or bulb (§ 5) the mystic syllable ōm is firmly fixed (§§ 23, 24), and whom the kumbhaka exercise (§ 21) leads to the home of the moon, or sahasrâra. He thus obtains samādhi.

In 69 she says, 'I held the steed of my citta, or thought, by the rein of absence of desire, after much practice having joined together the vital breaths of the ten nāḍis. Thereupon the digit of the moon (in the sahasrâra) melted and descended upon me, and the nothingness of the transient world became merged in the Nothing.' In the sahasrâra is the Void (§§ 20, 24), in which the empty world of matter becomes merged. The 'melting' of the moon means that the lunar nectar descends, as explained in the following remarks on No. 40.

In 40, the authoress advocates spiritual worship, in which the flowers offered to the object of worship (Śiva) are devotion, while over his (mental) image is to stream,—not material water, but—the juice of the digit of the moon (lunar nectar) abiding in the sahasrâra at the top of the vertebral column (§§ 8, 19 ff.). The nectar passes down through the susumnā and idā nāḍis (§ 8). The Yōgī who is becoming absorbed into sahasrâra drinks this nectar, and becomes master over himself and the kula (see kōl) (§ 21). Thus the expression means that he is to devote himself to samādhi by absorption into sahasrâra.

The same ideas are found in No. 9. She states, 'when the sun disappeared, there came the moonlight; when the moon disappeared only citta, or thought, remained. When citta disappeared nothing was left anywhere'. Just as the moon is in the highest cakra, so the sun is in the lowest,—the mūlādhāra, near the perineum (§§ 5, 9). 'Disappeared' means 'ceased to be present in consciousness'. That is to say, the Yōgī raises his consciousness from the mūlādhāra to the sahasrâra (§ 21), the sphere of absolute being. Here the sense of difference between his individual spirit and the Universal Being is sunk in the all-consuming consciousness of All-Being, All-Light.

In 93, there does not appear to be any reference to the moon of mysticism. It is stated that the cit, or pure spirit, is ever new and new, i.e. is ever full of new illusions, just as the natural moon is ever new and new, i.e. perpetually changes as it waxes and wanes.

Similarly, No. 109 presents no difficulty. Lallā states that after much searching she came from the inmost recesses of her soul into the moonlight, meaning either that she came into the light of true knowledge, or that her citta, or organ of thought, became absorbed into sahasrāra, as explained above.

There remains No. 22. This is dealt with in the note on the verse, and what is there said need not be repeated.

Sg. obl. sōma-garē, in the home of the moon, or the sahasrāra (see above), 34.

som^u, adj. equal, alike, 5, 16. Sg. abl. sami śratā, by equal, i.e. by thorough, union, 1; m. pl. nom. samē (m. c. for sāmⁱ), 16.

sum, f. a bridge, 34, 50, 96 (= K. Pr. 47), 98; K. Pr. 46, 47.

Pl. dat. suman-sōth^u, an embankment with bridges, i.e. an embankment broken here and there, the gaps being covered each by a crazy foot-bridge of only two or three planks (v. l. swamana-sōth^u), 98.

sōman, m. jasmine; sōman-bāg, a jasmine-garden, 68; see swa. suman, see sum.

sēmanz, K. Pr. 18 (= L. V. 98), sēmanz sōthi being translated 'in the middle of the way'. The correct reading is apparently suman-sōthi or swamana-sōthi, as in L. V. 98. See sum and swa.

samsār, m. the material universe, 35, 37; transmigration, the weary round of birth and rebirth, which must be endured by a soul till it obtains salvation, 6. Sg. gen. samsārun^u, of which the m. sg. dat. is samsāranis, 6. In modern Ksh. this form of the genitive is reserved for masculine proper names; sg. dat. samsāras, 35, 37.

sana, a suffix added to interrogative words to indicate indefiniteness, as in kyāh-sana, sg. abl. kaṇva-sana, what kind of, 39.

sōn, m. gold, 100 = K. Pr. 46.

sond^u (f. sūnz^ū), suffix of the genitive of all singular masculine animate nouns, except proper names. Cf. hond^u. M. sg. nom. gōra-sond^u wanun, the word (i.e. instruction) of the teacher, 108; f. sg. dat. (in sense of instr.) dayē-sanzē prahē, with the love of God, 105.

sandārun, to make steady, to put the brake on, to block (the wheels of a carriage), 26; to make (oneself) steady, to come to one's senses after a faint, to become cool and courageous after being subject to mental agitation, to take courage, 70; conj. part. sandōrith, 26; impv. fut. sandōrīzi, 70.

sangāth, m. collection, bringing together into one place; sangāth karun, to bring together in this way (used especially of collecting appliances, materials, &c., before setting to at any work), 17.

sapadun, conj. 2, to become; past m. sg. 2, sapodukh, thou becamest, i.e. thou hast become, 86.

sparshun, to touch; fut. sg. 3, sparshi, 37.

sar, m. a lake, an ocean, 47 (bis), 50, 78, 79; amrēta-sar, the lake of nectar, i.e. blissful union with the Supreme, 68; bhawa-sar, the ocean of existence, 23; with suff. of indef. art. sarāh, a certain lake, 50; sg. dat. saras, 23, 47, 68; sg. abl. sari, 47.

sārī, adj. inundated, flooded, (of a lake) overflowing, 50.

sirē, m. the sun; sg. dat. sirēs, K. Pr. 201.

sor^u, m. in sārī-phol^u, a mustard-seed (as an example of minuteness), 47.

sōr^u, adj. all. This word almost invariably takes emph. y, and becomes sōruy; m. sg. nom. sōruy, all that exists, everything, the totality of creation, 31, 42-3; m. pl. nom. sōriy, all, every one, 95, K. Pr. 150; dat. sārēniy padan, in all the verses, 84.

sur, m. a god; sura-guru, the chief of the gods (see art. guru); sura-guru-nāth, the lord of the chief of the gods. the Supreme Deity, 5, 65.

sarun or sōrun, to remember, 50, 91; to call to mind, to remember affectionately, meditate upon, 45, 65; conj. part. sōrith, 65; pres. part. with force of pres. sg. 2, sōran, dost thou remember?, 91; old pres. and fut. sg. 1, with suff. 3rd pers. sg. dat., saras, I remember it, 50 (quater); 3, sōri, 45. sārī-phol^u, see sor^u.

saras, see sar and sarun.

sarwa, adj. all (borrowed from Sanskrit), in sarwa-gath, going to all places, hence, as an epithet of the Deity, All-pervading, Omnipresent, 64; sarwa-kriy, he who made all things, the All-Creator, 59. The Ksh. word is sōr^u.

sūrya, the sun (borrowed from Sanskrit), in sūrya-maṇḍal, the orb, or disk, of the sun, used metaphorically to indicate the Supreme Deity, 75. The Ksh. word is sirž.

sās, 2, card. a thousand, 34; with suff. ā indicating the indef. art., sāsā, a thousand, i. e. any indefinite great number, 18, K. Pr. 57; sg. abl. sāsa-manza, out of a thousand, K. Pr. 150.

sath, 2, adj. good, 82; subst. m. a good man, a virtuous man; pl. nom. sath, 59, in both cases with alternative rendering of 'seven' (sath, 3).

sath, 3, card. seven; nom. sath, 59 (see sath, 2), 82; abl. sati, 50; sati nēngi, seven times, on seven occasions, 50. The seven worlds (lōka) are the earth, sky, heaven, middle region, place of rebirths, mansion of the blest, and abode of truth. There are also seven lower regions, called, respectively, Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Rasātala, Talātala, Mahūtala, and Pātala (see 59). In 82, Lallā states that after going through six paths (i. e. the six cakras, or the six vikāras, see art. shēh), she arrived at the sath-mārg, which means either 'the good road' or else 'the seventh bhūmi'. There are seven jñāna-bhūmis, or planes of knowledge; viz. śubhēcchā, or the plane of auspicious desire (for knowledge); vicāranā, or the plane of consideration; tannu-mānasa, or the plane of the subtle mind; sattvāpatti, the plane of acquirement of good sense; saṁsakti, the plane of intimate acquaintance; padārtha-bhāvinī, the plane of possession of the (true) meanings of words; and, seventhly, turya-gā, or that which conducts to the turya state, or condition leading to final emancipation.

sath, 4, f. hope; sg. dat., with emph. y, sūšūy, 102. Cf. satun.

sāth, m. a particular moment of time, an instant, 25; an instant of time, a very short time, a moment, 104; a moment of time, (in astrology) a particular fortunate, or unfortunate, moment, 3; sg. dat. sātas, for a moment, for an instant, 104; sg. abl., with emph. y, tamiy sōtiy, at that very moment, 25.

sōth^u, m. an embankment, e. g. along a river bank to confine the channel, and used as a road, 74, 98 = K, Pr. 18; sg. abl. sōthi manz (for dat. sōthis manz, see manz), 98, K. Pr. 18. Cf. sum.

sūty, see *sūt*ⁱ.

sūṣṭṣas, see satun.

sūṣṭṣy, see sath 4.

swa, adj. and pron. own; self. This is a Sanskrit word, and occurs only in borrowed Sanskrit compounds. Owing to the fact that wa following a consonant, and u in borrowed words, are both, in Kāshmīrī, pronounced as ō, Lallā frequently makes use of this to effect double meaning. Thus: (28) swa-para-vēṣār, discrimination on the Self and on the Supreme, or on the Supreme, who is the Self. One of these two is here certainly the correct translation; but the words are also capable of being taken as sō-para-vēṣār (i.e. su-para-vicāra), discrimination on Him who is excellently Supreme; (36) swa-darshēna-myūḷ^u, union with the Self (i.e. God) (brought about by) visiting (holy places), or sō-darshēna-myūḷ^u, union brought about by the excellent visiting (of holy places); (68) swa-man-bāg, the garden of one's own heart, or,—taking sōman as equivalent to the Persian suman,—sōman-bāg means 'a jasmine-garden'; (98 = K. Pr. 18); swa-mana-sōṭh^u, the embankment of (the illusions of) one's own mind, or suman-sōṭh^u, an embankment with crazy bridges (see sum); (71, 79) swa-vēṣār, discrimination exercised as regards the Self, or sō-vēṣār, the good discrimination. Swa-rūph, m. own form, i.e. the nature of anything, identity with; thus, (15) kha-swarūph, He who is identical with, or consists of, absolute vacuity, the impersonal Supreme Deity; (67) niza-swarūph, the nature of what is one's own, the nature of Self.

swōmī, m. a lord, one who is master or owner; shēn swōmī, the owner of the six (attributes of the Deity), 13, see shēh.

sāwun, to cause to sleep, to put to sleep, to lay to sleep; conj. part. sōvith, K. Pr. 57.

swarg, m. heaven; sg. dat. *swargas bōj*ⁱ, a possessor of heaven, 62.

swātma, m. one's own self; hence, the Self, recognized as identical with the Supreme; sg. dat. swātmas, to the Supreme Self, 61; shēnkar-swātma, Śaṅkara (i.e. Śiva) recognized as one with Self, 39, 40.

swayam, oneself (borrowed from Sanskrit), 33.

sōy, suy, see tih.

syund^u, m. the river Sindh, one of the three principal rivers of Kashmir. Its waters are sacred. syund^u-zal, pl. the waters of the Sindh, 81.

ta, 1, conj. and, 3, 4, 13, 17, 20, 22, 24, 29, 31, 35 (bis), 37, 39, 41, 44, 48, 52, 56-7, 78-9, 89, 90-1, 94-5, 101-2-3; K. Pr. 18 (bis), 102 (bis); na ta, and not, nor, 96-7; K. Pr. 47, 102; cf. na ta under ta, 2; na . . . na . . . ta, not . . . nor . . . nor, 15. A strengthened form of this word is tōy, 1, q.v.

ta, 2, conj. then, and then, and next, thereupon (= Hindī tō) (in this sense often scarcely distinguishable from ta, 1), 1, 4, 19, 23, 43, 47, 68, 82, 104; then, and then, thereafter, but, 98; then, so, accordingly, therefore, 21, 30, 33, 42, 46, 51-2, 54, 70, 80-1, 89, 99 (bis), 100; K. Pr. 46 (quater); then, so that, 66; then, and yet, nevertheless, 60; then, used to indicate the apodosis of a conditional or quasi-conditional, sentence, 2, 27, 55, 87, or the antecedent clause of a relative clause, 61; often (like the Hindī tō) colouring a whole sentence, but itself hardly translatable, I wonder if, well then, verily, &c., according to the context, 9, 19, 92; na ta (= Hindī nahī tō), otherwise, or else, 19, 71; K. Pr. 150; cf. na ta under ta, 1. A strengthened form of this word is tōy, 2, q.v.

ti, conj. (= Hindī bhī) also, 48, 106; K. Pr. 18; even, 32, 48; kēh ti nā, nothing at all, 9, 11; kēh ti nō, nothing at all, 90; kāh ti nō sath, no substance at all, 41; kōh ti na khēh, no harm at all, 77; tō ti (Hindī tau bhī), even then, 29.

taday, adv. then only, then and not till then, 77.

tagun, conj. 2, to be known how to be done, to be possible. This verb is used as a potential verb, the ability always being mental, not physical (cf. the Sanskrit tajjñāna-, by which paṇḍits translate this word); tih yēs tagi, to whom that is possible, i.e. he who knows how to do that, 24; tih yēs karun tagi, to whom the doing that is possible, he who knows how to do that, 37. If it is desired to indicate physical possibility the verb hžkun (q.v.) must be used.

tih, pronoun of the third person, he, 5, 6, 8, 20, 24, 27, 31 (bis), 33-4, 37 (bis), 43 (bis), 65, 71-2, 76, 105; she; it, 70; K. Pr. 46 (bis); substantival demonstrative pronoun that, 20-1, 37, 57 (bis), 69, 75, 90, 94, 107; adjectival demonstrative pronoun, 3, 15, 25, 28 (bis), 34, 47, 52 (bis), 77, 81, 104; sometimes used substantively, but treated as an adjective (see below), 2, 12-13, 58 (bis), 94.

This pronoun is either animate or inanimate, and the animate forms may be either masculine or feminine. The inanimate forms are of common gender. Moreover, as seen above, there is a cross-division, according as it is used substantively or adjectivally. We shall consider the substantival forms first.

. As an animate substantival pronoun, the following forms occur:—

masc. sg. nom. suh, he, 8, 24, 31, 33; with emph. y, suy, he only, he verily, 31, 34, 37.

dat. tas, to him, 20, 34, 37, 105; with emph. i, tāsⁱ, to him only, 65.

gen. (m. sg. nom.) tasondu; with emph. y, tasonduy, his only, 72.

ag. tāmⁱ, by him; with emph. y, tāmiy, by him alone, by him verily, 5, 43 (bis).

pl. nom. and acc. tim, they, 6; them, 76: with emph. y, timay, they alone, 27.

gen. (m. sg. nom.) tikhondu, their, 71.

There is no occurrence of the feminine pronoun used substantively in the songs.

As an inanimate substantival pronoun, we have the following:—

sg. nom. and acc. tih, it, that, 24, 37, 70, 107; with emph. y, tiy, 20, 21.

dat. tath, to it, K. Pr. 46 (bis).

abl. tawa, by that; used adverbially to mean 'for that reason', 'on that account', 'therefore', 57 (bis); with emph. y, taway, therefore, 69, 90, 94; by that means, 75.

pl. nom.; with emph. y, timay, those very, 13.

Used as an animate pronominal adjective, the following forms occur. They are the same as the corresponding substantival forms:—

m. sg. nom., with emph. y, suy, that very (god), 15.

pl. nom. tim, those (rams), 77.

f. sg. nom. sōh; with emph. y, sōy, (I am) only that (Lal), 81.

When used as an inanimate pronominal adjective, the substantival forms tih and tiy of the nominative are not used, the animate substantival forms (m. suh, suy; f. sōh, sōy) being used instead. On the other hand, the inanimate substantival form of the dative, tath, is also used as an adjective. Thus:—

m. sg. nom. suh, that (wine), 104; with emph. y, suy.
that very (time) 3, (spell) 34.

dat. tath, in that (lake), 47.

abl. tami; with emph. y, tamiy, at that very (time), 25.

pl. acc. tim, those (foods), 28; those (garments), 28.

f. sg. nom. sōy, that very (stone), 52 (bis).

As regards the use of the substantival forms of this pronoun, as semi-adjectives, this consists in the use of suh, suy, sōh, or sōy, instead of tih or tiy, when referring to something inanimate. This occurs:—

(1) When the substantival pronoun is the antecedent to an adjectival relative pronoun. The antecedent, although a substantive, is then treated also as an adjective. Thus:—
yih yih karm korum, suh arsun, whatever act I performed, that was worshipping (God), 58. Here the relative yih yih, whatever, is an adjective, and therefore suh (the adjectival form of the antecedent) is used, and not tih, the substantival form. On the other hand, if the relative is inanimate and substantival, the inanimate substantival form, tih, is used for the antecedent. Thus, in the next line of the same verse, we have yih wōtkorum, tiy manthʳ, what I uttered, that verily was a mystic invocation.

(2) In a copulative sentence, when the subject is a pronoun, this, although substantival, is treated as an adjective in agreement with the complement. Thus, (2) suy (not tiy) wōpadēsh, that alone is the instruction; (12) suy (not tiy) chuy jñān, that alone is (true) knowledge; (58) suy yih tanthʳ, that alone is this scripture; (94) suy gaur wākh, that became the (mystic) word.

thūjʷ, f. (this word is a feminine diminutive of thal), a small place; esp. a small sacred cella or small wooden temple, in which an image of a god and other appurtenances of worship are kept; sg. nom. (m. c.) thajī, 33.

thal, m. a place; sg. abl. thali thali, in every place, in every land, 53.

thamawun, to cause to stop, to stop, to prevent going on;
inf. sg. nom. thamawun, 38.

thān, m. a place; al-thān, 60, see al; sg. dat. -thānas, 60.

tihondʷ, see tih.

thaph, f. the act of grasping or taking hold of; — karüñü, to grasp, 4.

thar, f. the back; — däriñü, to offer the back, to place the back at one's disposal (of a riding animal), 88.

thürü, f. a bush, a shrub, 96 = K. Pr. 47.

tahsaldür, m. a revenue collector, a tax-gatherer (looked upon as inevitable and merciless), K. Pr. 56.

thāwun, to put, to place, 70; dūr^u thāwun, to put far off, to put away, 27; kan thāwun, to place the ear, to give heed, attend, listen (to), 91; conj. part. thövith, 27; impve. sg. 2, thāv, 91; impve. fut. thöv^uzi, 70.

yih, 1, proximate demonstrative pronoun, this, he; (as a pronoun) 20, 26, 54, 58 (bis), 84 (bis), 85 (bis), 109; (as a pronominal adjective) 7, 13, 28, 95; combined with tih, that, suy yih, that very, 58.

This pronoun is either animate or inanimate, and the animate forms may be either masculine or feminine. The inanimate forms are of common gender. Moreover, there is a cross-division, according as it is used as a pure pronoun, or as a pronominal adjective. We shall consider the purely pronominal forms first.

As an animate pronoun, the following forms occur:—

Masc. sg. nom. yih, 26.

Fem. sg. nom., with emph. y, yihay, she verily, this very woman, 54 (ter).

As an inanimate pronoun, we have:—

Sg. nom. yih, 84 (bis), 85 (bis); with emph. y, yuhuy, this very, this alone, 1, 20, 58; suy yih, that very, 58.

Pl. nom. yim, 109.

As a pronominal adjective, it occurs, in these poems, only as referring to inanimate things; viz.:—

M. sg. nom. yih, 7, 28; with emph. y, yuhuy, 13.

Dat. yith, 95.

yih, 2, relative pronoun, who, which, what. It is either animate or inanimate, and the animate forms may be either masculine or feminine, while the substantival inanimate forms are of common gender. There is also the cross-division into its forms as a pronominal substantive and into its forms as a pronominal adjective.

As an animate pronominal substantive, or pure pronoun, the following forms occur:—

m. sg. nom. yus^u, 20, 24, 37, 45, 65.

m. sg. dat. yēs, 15 (bis), 21, 33, 34, 37; yēmis, or, with emph. y, yēmisa^y, 5.

m. sg. ag. yēmⁱ, 5 (bis), 26, 43, 62 (bis).

m. pl. nom. yim, 95; ag. yimav, 6, 27.

As an inanimate pronominal substantive, we have:—

sg. nom. yih, 20, 21, 107.

sg. abl. yēwa, by which; hence, in order that, so that 28 (bis), 75.

As a pronominal adjective, we have:—

m. sg. nom. (inan.) yuh^u, 61; yuh, 8; yih, 58 (bis), 61.

f. sg. nom. (inan.), with emph. y, yōsay, 52.
